.a.C. Says: Inflation and Taxes

Food 1 hour, 39 minutes
Housing 1 hour, 25 minutes Clothing37 minutes Transportation42 minutes Medical 24 minutes
Recreation 20 minutes Recreation 20 minutes
Others 24 minutes
This shows that the average family of four works

It per cent of the time just to pay taxes. High-income bracket workers work 75 per cent of the time for taxes. They may not realize this because most of the taxes.

Taxes and inflation have reduced the purchasing Taxes and initation have reduced the purchasing hower of the dollar by 23 cents during the past 10 years. It has reduced it by half during the past 20 years. The Post chart also shows how much more income is needed today to buy the same things it would buy 12 years ago at the end of the war. It shows:

Income Needed 1946 Up 50% Up 47% Up 43% Up 49% Up 43% Up 38% $ 4,445 7,343 $ 3,000 5,000 7.500 10,000 14,485 15,000 25,000 34,483

The reason why the lower incomes have decreased in value percentage-wise more than higher incomes is because more of these incomes go for necessities such as food, clothing, housing, etc., which have spiraled under inflation. Foderal taxes have not increased over this 10 years. But compared with 20 years ago, it would take 200% or more today for the $50,000 income to be equal to that left over after the pre-war taxation toll.

These comparisons should cause each family to gealize that what has happened in 10 and 20 years will continue to happen under our present spending spree. Another chart in Look Magazine shows what the average family is paying for farm subsidies, welfare agencies, national defense, veterans, foreign ald and other government programs. It is a picture of a grow-ing bureaucracy which is leading the economy into

It is probable most of the workers have received wage and salary increases to equal or surpass the lost sourchasing power of their dollar. But millions of older people are attempting to live on fixed incomes which have not increased with the rising cost of everything hey buy.

Because the problem is so great, the average person does his complaining around the bridge table or on the goli course. But when it comes to joining in an on me gou course, but when it comes to joining in an organization to fight the unnecessary spending of tax money there is great apathy. When candidates offer greater aid to farmers or veterans these groups lorget what the goat is to all transports. hat the cost is to all taxpayers. Each group is out all it can get for itself. They only protest when it is the other fellow who gets the benefits.

Unless the people realize that present trends will destroy the value of their money and that inflation and confiscatory taxation are a sure way to destruction of dur system of government they are doomed to that fate. our system of government they are doomed to that fate. Readers do not like many figures in their reading. But unless they have them to show what has happened they have no way of measuring what will happen. The sensible person will study these figures and support tandidates and organizations who seek to stop the spirating cost of taxes and inflation.—L.A.C.

Nobody bothered to ask him his name,

CITY OF LONG BEACH uses the firm to get out annual tax bills. For oil well firms CBS prepares individual well costs—an almost prohibitive task in a large scale operation.

The largest independent service of its kind in Southern California, Commercial Business Service, Inc., is a Long Beach, product, started by two men who cashed in on the

MOTHERS ARE ADDICTS Drugged Babies

Dying at Birth CHICAGO (AP)—A bead of sweat ran down the doctor's hairline and disappeared in the cloth mask covering his mouth and nose.

The baby sucked strangely at his fingers and hands as though constantly hungry, Bullino, not with all the vomiting and diarrhea.

The doctor bit his lip. The convulsions suggested meningi-tis infection. But then it could be brain hemorrhage.

be brain hemorrhage.
Only one way to find out.
Laboratory tests. But such tests: are painstakingly slow. Could
the baby last that long?
The doctor didn't know it yet, but the infant was one of an increasing number of drugged habies—born that way because their mothers are way because their mothers are narcotics addicts.,

SUCH UNBORN babies share a small amount of narcotics whenever the addicted mother gives herself an injection. The drug reaches their bloodstream through the placents.

A team of Chicago doctors believes there has been such an "alarming increase" in the use of narcotics by young adults that physicians and nurses that physicians and nurses everywhere should be familian with these sometimes fatal symptoms in the newborn,

A baby in such condition can reach life's crossroads almost at the moment of birth.

Because of dependency on narcotics has been built up during the gestation period, the painful symptoms suffered when the drug suddenly is withdrawn can be fatal, unless sedatives or opiates are ad-ministered quickly.

But the exposure to nar-cotics has been so brief, the baby will be freed of further craving if he recovers from the first withdrawal seizure.

SEVERAL SUCH births have heen handled at the premature infant station at Chicago's Michael Reese Hospital. The bables usually are referred hospitals. Bo cause the majority of the mothers have had little or no prenatal care, often little infor-purnate care, often interintor-mation is available when the baby arrives.

Dr. Ralph H. Kunstadter, a member of the Michael Reese group, saya the baby's symptoms may appear shortly after birth or be delayed several hours. It apparently depends on when the mother has given herself the last dose of heroin or other narcotic

Because most narcotics users are habitual hars about their addiction, doctors unfamiliar with drug cases can be con-fused in making an on-the-spot diagnosis, Kunstadter says.

Some drug-addicted mothers deny ever using narcotics, even when confronted with the knowledge that such informa-tion might prove life-saving to their baby.

The expected symptoms in drug-dependent babies include: Breathing difficulties, grunt-ing, drawing back, intermittent WASHINGTON (P)-John L Lewis was reported to have won a pay increase of at least $2 a day for soft coal miners Saturday as he maneuvered for a new contract with the bituinous industry.

The 78-year-old United Mine Workers president met with mine owner representatives beind closed doors.

White neither side would dismen, the talks were believed to have hit a snag in Lewis' de-mand that the owners of union nines agree not to handle coal roduced in non-union mines.

EDWARD G. FOX, president of the Bituminous Coal Operators Assn. and chief industry engotiator, was reported offering even fatter pay boosts and vacation allowances if Lewis would drop this demand.

About 20 per cent of the nation's soft coal production comes from non-union mines; and Lewis long has sought to rganize these pits.

Attorneys for steel companies which own captive mines were reported protesting that the proposed ban on handling non-union coal might bring antitrust proceedings against the coal industry.

The steel companies want to continue being able to buy extra fuel from non-union mines when they need it to augment the output of their own unionized captive mines.

Big Step Taken to Get Health Plan for L.B. City Employes toward adoption of a suitable health insurance program for Long Beach City employes. A special committee, appointed to design a plan, approved a list of liberal benefits. The proposal follows a plan that has wide acceptance locally. It deserves the earnest consideration of the City Council.

The question, of course, is not whether the city should join with its employes in support of a health insurance plan. That question was settled by the City Council last July, when it voted funds for a six-month health insurance program, starting next January. At issue at this time is the nature of the plan.

SINCE THE MIDDLE OF SEPTEMBER, an 11member committee appointed by the Council has been studying numerous proposals. They have come up with a service-type plan-that is, one providing for payment of actual services performed for hospitalization, medicine, or surgery, with no dollar limits or maximums

Good arguments support this plan.

One, administrative costs to the city would be kept at a minimum, for there would be no need for filling out claim forms. Under this plan, hospitals and doctors would bill the underwriting company directly. Under some other plans, the insured must obtain receipted bills and submit them through the employer to the insurance company before reimbursement is made.

Two, the insured would not be required to pay in advance, as under some plans. There is no outlay of, DREW PEARSON Three, the doctors and hospitals don't have to wait for their money as long as they would under some Four, built-in controls protect the underwriting company and the patient, alike, from having to pay more than the accepted fee for a particular service.

Approximately 8,500 persons in 16 business firms in Long Beach have a health insurance plan similar to the one offered for city employes. The persons who have this coverage and the firms, as well, are satisfied with the program. None of the 16 member groups has given up membership.

THE PLAN RECOMMENDED BY the special city committee (by a vote of seven to three) also has the approval of the Long Beach Hospital Assn., the Long Beach Medical Assn., the Long Beach Osteopathic Assn., the Long Beach City Employe's Assn., the Long Beach Fireman's Mutual Benefit Assn., the Long Beach Police Assn., and the Long Beach Local of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal

No program at this stage could be considered definitive. But the plan which now goes before the City Council is an excellent start. It has liberal benefits, it is convenient, and it has the backing of employe groups and medical groups. A good start has been made toward giving Long Beach city employes health insurance coverage that will compare favorably with that now offered the employes of many other

Nov. 4 Left Capital a 'Depressed Area'

By WALTER T. RIDDER, ROBERT E. LEE AND WILLIAM W. BROOM

WASHINGTON—There's a new "depressed area" on the economic face of the nation—Capitol Hill right here in Washington.

The big turnover in the House and Senate has produced a chaotic unemployment situation in congressional offices. An estimated 500 secretaries and administrative assistants will lose their jobs because their bosses quit or falled of re-election. At the same time, Roll Call, the newspaper put out by and for staff aides to senators and House members, estimates that a record job-seeking force of 2,500 is swarming over Capitol Hill trying to fill the 500 openings.

The United States Employment Service has been asked to help the Republican and Democratic congressional committees line up new jobs for the about-to-be unemployed. USES has written each member of the new 86th Congress offering help in filling staff vacancies or, in the case of new members, assembling staff vacancies or, in the case of new members, assembling staff vacancies.

There's one small measure of consolation for those whose bosses went down to defeat Nov. 4. A law passed this session enables congressional secretaries with at least two years' experience to qualify for federal jobs in the executive branch of the government by simply passing a non-competitive Civil Service examination.

FRIEND OF OURS OVER AT THE State Department has decorated the walls of his office with two massive pictures— one of Ulysses S. Grant, the other of Dwight D. Eisenhower. When asked whether the one had made him think of the other, he repiled vigorously: "Certainly not. They were the only two pictures of the same size available (free) from the State Dr-

He enlivened his first press conference here as a prospective senator with his homely "cow country" talk. Part of the quibbling has star for the quibbling has involved not just the 49th star for Alaska, but how a 50th star for Hawali should fit into the new design. This has bothered the flag commission even though Congress hasn't as yet approved state-hood for Hawaii.

Flag-makers see no reason why the President and his commission should not have been ready for the 49-star design months ago, shortly after Alaskan statehood was approved by Congress on

As a result, industry spokesmen say that the new flag cannot possibly be in volume production for ceremonials next summer, even if Con-gress approves the White House design early in January. They point out that flag-making is not done on the assembly line, but is a tre-

On Dec. 14, within the shadow of the cracked in the shadow of the cracked walls and sagging roof of the school huilding which was blown up by hate-mongers, Billy Graham will preach on the subject of getting along with our fellow men.

At that time, plans for the rebuilding of the Clinton school will be announced. The response from all over the nation has been so heartwarming that the goal is within sight. If the response con-tinues at the present rate up until Dec. 14, the rebuilding

Demos Search Their Souls for Significance of Nov. 4

ALMOST SIX YEARS AGO at the Monterey Peninsula resort of Asilomar, decimated California Democrats started scribling a blue-print for recovery and rehabilitation. It was called the California Democratic Council, or CDC, a statewide organization of local Democratic clubes—unofficial but notant cratic clubs—unofficial but potent.

Some 40 CDC directors met in Fresno last weekend to take note of their smashing Nov. 4 victory and try to size up what lies ahead. The accent was on the sizing up, the cheers of victory subdued.

Alan Cranston, state controller-elect and first president of CDC, sum-marized and focused:

"With the help of many factors we achieved the first objective of Asilomar. It would be wrong to exaggerate or to undercount the HOUSER role of CDC. Some of the things that happened without CDC;

Brown would have won, possibly Engle too, but no one else would have won and I doubt if we would have held the Legislature, and the Board of Equalization would not have been ours without CDC. "Our first task is to do the right things with the power we have won. And CDC should help see to it that the people it helped elect do these right things, not on the basis of a day-to-day check but in the matter of underlying responsibilities, principles and pur-

California's new lieutenant governor, Glenn M. Anderson, also projected into the future:

"We're now facing a more important election. We need to study what happened in the general election—to look at each precinct to try to find out why precincts with almost identical characteristics turned out one favorable and one unfavorable vote."

Anderson, also stressed the need for better communication between legislators and the people in the districts. He cited among his top interests a Fair Employment Practices law "with teeth, patterned after New York's law" and the elimination of cross-filing "once and for all."

ASSEMBLYMAN JESSE UNRUH, Southern California campaign director for Pat Brown, told the CDC Board, "It's a mistake to say this election is a mandate; we've only to say this election is a mandate; we've only recaptured the Democratic votes we've thrown away in the past."

Unruh and Anderson both pointed to the "inherited from Republicans" state debt of $268 million and stressed that the people should be told that necessary new taxes are not the capriclous spending spree "of which we're been accurated in advance". we've been accused in advance,"

UNRUH SAID THE DEMOCRATIC Par-UNRUH SAID THE DEMOCRATIC Party has a continuing responsibility to demonstrate that it is "competent, capable, responsible and responsive." He said he has no doubt that the Legislature will pass an FEPC law and a liberal program but "we will practice as much restraint as we can."

CDC President Joseph Wyatt made an impressive exhortation against smugness when he tubed the very close margins of victory or defeat in some contests. If we lose contests

LETTER OF THE WEEK

Discrimination

TO THE EDITOR:

The worst discrimination in this country today is against the older worker. He has had the experience that the younger man should not hope to compete against, but due to his age he is relegated to the scrap heap. In Kiplinger's 1938 success book, older employes were shown to be superior in seven qualities over the younger worker. These are all overlooked by the employer on account of a pension system.

A letter from the U. S. Labor Department states that it is aware of the problems of middle age and older workers and its studies support the argument that ability and not age should be the basis of hiring. They could make a good start by insisting that their findings should be put into effect by any concern doing government work.

California Editors Push for Swifter Vote-Count System

By HENRY MACARTHUR SACRAMENTO (CNS)-

Shortly after the No-vember elections, this column commented on the necessity of speeding up returns, and the adoption of some system other than the one presently for modernizing the casting of ballots by the voting public.
Subsequently, a committee representing the Cali-fornia News-paper Pub-lishers Assn. editor's con-ference, discussed the problem, and urged drastic reform of MacARTHUR counting returns.

The committee, chairmaned by Gordon Sinclair, of the Santa Cruz News-Sentinel, blamed the current system for illegal procedures, errors, confusion, political buck-passing and a month-long delay in determining the results state-wide election.

Only because of the work done by the wire services for their newspaper, radio and television clients do the people of the state know how an election comes out. If left to officialdom, it would literally be weeks before results are

Consequently, the commit-tee plans to seek legislation requiring an immediate official count of the vote, a statewide mandatory counting sys-tem, double ballots, electronic computers, voting machines and standardized precinct procedure.
The present system of balloting probably was an excel-lent procedure when it was adopted back in the horse and buggy days of the nation. But the country and state have progressed beyond the horse and buggy in most of its way of life, so there seems to be no reason why it should not progress in casting and counting ballots, at least no valid reason.

Admittedly, changing the system would cost money, as has been pointed out previ-ously. But if the truth were known, the initial investment undoubtedly would be made up in the long run by a sav-ing on manpower in the election boards. It is strange that a state which has adopted electronic bookkeeping and spends hun-dreds of thousands of dollars a year for rentals on elec-tric machines which do al-most everything, is reluctant to adopt laws to rent voting machines every two years, or spend the initial amount to buy the equipment. ALTHOUGH the November election is nearly a month past, the official results have not as yet been made public, and probably will not be until and probably will not be using some time after Dec. 15. And in some of the close races, this is embarrassing both to incoming office-holders, as well as outgoing officials.

With sufficient pressure on the legislature, it is not inconceivable that some changes for the better could be effected in time for the 1960 primaries and general elections, if there from some organizations the states election procedures.

Army Scores 22-6 Win

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) --Army spotted Navy's new of-fense a first period touchdown Saturday and then went on to grind out a me-thodical 22-6 victory behind the brilliant running of Rob Anderson and guard Bob Noogratz' knack for recovering fumbles.

Anderson scored two of the three Army touchdowns and Novogratz recovered three key fumbles in the Cadet's march to victory. Then, in the closing minutes, Army end Don Usry put the game on ice.

Usry intercepted a desperate Navy pass with two minutes to go and ran 38 yards for the touchdown that wrapped it up. Before that, Usry had caught five passes for 80 yards. A crowd of 100,000 on a chilly day saw Navy in the game until Usry's run-not so much on Navy power but Navy guard George Fritz-inger recovered. Eight plays later Joe Bellino plunged three yards over left guard for the TD. Ray Wellborn missed the PAT.

A few minutes later Cadet Harry Walters fumbled on the Middies' 13 and Navy's Tom Albershart recovered, Navy marched to the Army 13, where Bellino lost two yards on a fourth and three situation. From then on it was all Army.

Sports Merry-Go-Round By HANK HÖLLINGWORTH

Four "forgotten men" were the heroes of Saturday's bruising Notre Dame-Southern California game—and five will get you 10 that you've never heard of

The unsung quartet was Bob Scarpitto, Dave Hurd, Norm Odyniec and Bobby Williams. If the first three names are familiar to you, then you're better versed on Notre Dame's football fortunes than this department.

You've certainly heard of Williams, He was Notre Dame's I quarterback at the season's start, but gave way to the rain of the mob midway through the campaign to George (Iciman) Izo.

Tizo was cold as ice against the Trojans and Williams, a good-looking senior from Wilkes Barre, Pa., stepped into the breech and personally escorted the Irish to their bristling

Coach Terry Brennan summed up Williams' contribution when he told newsmen simply, "Bobby was today's hero. He was the big man this Saturday afternoon."

And what about the other three "unknowns"-

1. Scarpitto is a third-string right half from Rahway, This sophomore proved a crushing blocker, carried the three times for 48 yards, and ran back a Trojan punt

2. Hurd, a second-string center, was the top defensive epting a pass. A junior, Hurd is from the colorful village of Three Rivers, Mich.

—Call it a South End "deep freeze," or whatever you will, have been the Nick Pietrosantes, Al Ecuyers, Bill Macks and Cruck Juntillos were injured, the "unsung Irishmen" took over Saturday.

WHILE MOST NEWSMEN clustered around the dressing frees of the aforementioned All-American nominees, this reporter invaded the more quiet atmospheres of the "unsung Surprisingly, although he was the game hero, Williams chatted quietly with just a few newsmen. Actually, his cub-

"I was a lucky boy this afternoon," whispered Williams.
"I just gave the ball to Odyniec and Crotty (Jim), then the line did the rest."

Pressed as to his opinion of SC, Williams answered:
"SC hit pretty hard—when they hit. But our guys didn't seem to have much trouble moving them around in that line."
Which Trojan most impressed Williams?

"That's easy," laughed the blushing senior, "this boy, Buford, He's something to watch, I'm afraid he's a cluch to make our all-opponent team."

Then Izo broke in "You can say that again," commented George, "but these McKeever twins are everything we've been reading about. In fact, I saw them so often, I thought they were triplets. How come the Notre Dame recruiters let them get away?" "Were the McKeevers responsible for your horrible passing day (three interceptions in six attempts). Mr. Izo?

""No, positively not," answered Izo emphatically. "I was not rushed, I had fine protection and I left I threw my passes very well. The trouble was that we changed our passing very well. The trouble was that we changed our passing procedure this past week and my receivers were going down-field about 10 or 12 yards, then cutting in, But, the SC de-field about 10 or 12 yards, then enting in, but, the 80 defenders were right face on the spot. Ordinarily, my receivers had been going down less than 10 yards.

"Give all the credit to Southern Cal's defenders, especially this Buford, Monty Stickles is 12 inches taller than Buford, yet Buford was right there to intercept two of my passes from him."

"This kid's gonus be one of our all-time greats," he enthused. "He was a blocking devil out there." Commented Scarpitto;

The SC defenders were easy to block because they were almost stationary targets. On some and sweens to the left, their man (Luther Hayes) was like a pigeon in a shooting gallery. I thought the Trojans were very spotty in their tackling, too.

"I mean all except one. The guy (Clark Holden) who nailed me on the 82-yard punt return really creamed me, Man, I was rattled down to my toes."

Hurd said, in effect, that the Trojan line could have made an All-American out of anyone playing the center spot Satan all-American out of anybody pressuring me when we we're on defense," remarked the Irish center. "I'd feel a light tag or two, but that's all. Then, the ball carrier would be running right at me. Honestly, it was easy.

"I felt sorry for that little Buford, though. He was so dant tired near the end of the game. Why, the last tackle I made on him, I actually tried to have him hit the ground easy.

Odvoice complimented the McKeevers, Buford and "that No. 62. They played as well as anyone we've met this season.
That No. 62 did a real good job on me. Everytime I got dumped, I'd see him getting off the pile. But, the other Tro-jans disappointed me a little. They just didn't hit very hard."
"That No. 62," incidentally, was guard Frank Florentino,

Rockne Story on TV Tonight

NEW YORK UP-Twenty-eight years ago next Saturday Notre Dame defeated Southern California, 27-0. That was the last football game Knute Rockne coached.

Less than four months later he was dead.

Tonight he will live again, if only brief-through a medium he never knew. Pat Brien, who won acting fame for his screen portraval of Rockne, will again play the part of the great Notre Dane coach; this time on television ("You Asked For It," ABC-TV, 7 p.m.).

O'Brien was a substitute quarterback on the 1921 Marquette team that lost to a Rockne team, 20-6. In a football sense was nothing compared with the Notre Dame master whose teams won 105 games, while losing only 12 and tying 5.

The TV program, entitled "Rockne of Notre Dame," was filmed mostly on the beautiful South Bend campus and at the Los Angeles Coliscum, site of Rockne's last game and where the Fighting Irish and the Trojans renewed that rivalry Saturday for the 29th time...

But the most stirring scene is in the cornfield near Bazaar, Kan, where The Rock died in the wreckage of an airplane on March 31, 1931.

There is also a shot of the crowd waiting outside the Sacred Heart Church at Noire Dame into which eight strong men from the 1930 Notre Dame team carried his casket. There are tears in the eyes of these bruising football players. The story of The Rock is not to be taken lightly. Pat O'Brien does it justice.

Rams Get 9 Draft Picks Monday

By RALPH BERNSTEIN

PHILADELPHIA (P)—The National Football League's player draft comes up here Monday and the system Commissioner Bert Heil credits with equalizing team strength will allow the Los Angeles Rams to draft mine players in just four rounds and the Pittsburgh Steelers none.

Is there something wrong?

Walter Wolfner, managing director of the Chicago Cardinals, and George Preston Marshall, volatile owner of the Washington Redskins, say definitely "yes." George Halas, long a power in pro football policy, declines comment, says he'll voice his opinion on the subject at a league meeting. Other owners and general managers vary in opinion on the matter from "no," to "no comment."

Bell, recognized as the father of the draft, sees nothing wrong in the situation.

wrong in the situation.

HOW DO THE RAMS GET NINE and the Steelers none when each should pick four? The situation is brought about by the NFL policy which allows clubs to use future draft choices as part of player trades.

"It's like borrowing money from a loan shark to pay somebody else," says the Cardinals' Wollner.

Adds the outspoken Chicago executive:

"I am bitterly opposed to trading away draft choices because it defeats the purpose of the draft which is supposed to equalize strength in the league.

"By trading draft choices strong teams can afford to draft 'redshirts' and in that way the strong get stronger and weak weaker." (Redshirts are collegians eligible for the product because their class has graduated, but with college eligibility remaining. The pros "ice" them for future delivery when they actually graduate).

Marshall, the flip talking Redskins' boss, is equally whement in his opposition to trading away draft choices. He would prohibit any team from dealing off or releasing its first and second round choices until the players selected have been signed and participated in at least three games.

signed and participated in at least three games.

The main point voiced by those clubs in favor of trading draft choices is that it gives a team a chance to strengthen its runks immediately with a proven pro performer.

Coach Buddy Parker of Pittsburgh approves the system. Parker has made so many deals and lost so many draft choices that some fans have been questioning his tactics. Parker says he would rather have "proven players" then take a chance in the draft. He claims he is building for the present, not portant draft choice.

Coach George Wilson of the Detroit Llons buys the theory. too, that if you can obtain proven players who will help in a spot where you need help immediately, it's a good thing to use draft choices for player talent. "Draft choice don't a spot where you need neap immediately, it's a good using to use draft choices for player talent. "Draft choice don't win ball games," says Wilson who sent veterans Ray Krouse to Baltimore, Carl Karilivacz to New York, and Tom Tracy and Bobby Layne to Piltsburgh for draft choices.

and Bobby Layne to Fittsburgh for draft choices.

Pete Rozelle, general manager of the Rams, says about trading high draft choices: "It has helped us and we believe has been helpful to other clubs. No one can say the Eagles didn't help themselves by getting Norm Van Brocklin. Some of the clubs who do not have the budgets for scouting and cannot utilize their choices to the extent others can, through settled trading and times half themselves."

cannot utilize their choices to the extent others-can, through satute (rading, off times help themselves."

Let's take a quick look at some of the facts involved in this subject as presented by actual dealings.

The Rams, who should be in favor of trading high draft choices since they obtain them instead of giving them away, sent Van Brocklin to the Eagles for Philadelphia's No. 1 choice and two veteran players. Admittedly, Van Brocklin is one of the finest passing quarterbacks in the league, but the Eagles gave up a young proven tackle, a promising defended.

PITTSBURGH TRADED ITS NO. 1 CHOICE to San Fran-PITTSBURGH TRADED ITS NO. 1 CHOICE to San Francisco for quarterback Earl Morcall, who since has been sent to Detroit as part of the involved Bobby Layne trade. The Steelers' No. 2 choice went along for Layne. Their No. 3 selection went to Los Angeles for Tank Younger, and No. 4 to the Rams for haliback Deon Derby. Pittsburgh still has Layne, Younger and Derby, and guard Mike Sandusky who came along in the Morrall deal. The club appears to have little future with its top draft choices gone. And Layne and Younger, like Van Brocklin, could windup their careers any time.

Despite Marshall's stand against the trading of draft picks, the Redskins tossed one away in a deal with the Rams. They traded their second choice for quarterback Rudy Buklch. Last week, the 'Skins asked waivers on Buklch.

They traded their second choice in the day the Hast week, the 'Skins asked waivers on Bukich.

When the clubs convene Monday, Los Angeles will select nine players with Detroit entitled to seven and Cieveland five. Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Green Bay, the Bears and Giants each have three coming. San Francisco and the Cardinals retained their four choices. Pittsburgh has none. Thus three teams will share 21 of the players to be selected.

Crisler finally hurried Elliott's succession this season when he persuaded Costerbann to make this his last season. It is heard that Bennie wanted to quit on a winner, but yielded to pressure and accepted another post to pave the way for Bump to take over next year.

Crister also had a hand in putting Pete in the Rose Howl in only his second season at Cal.

He did this by authoring the new two-point conversion rule last winter. The rule was designed to be Crister's memorial to the game. He thought it up, introduced it and pushed it iftrough the rules committee of which he was

Without the rule, the result might have been dif-ferent.

DR. ELLIOTT, NOW 64, SAID RECENTLY 'I only hope that Michigan doesn't play California in football... at least for a long time. For if they do meet, I know that neither coach would want to win at the expense of the other one."

This was his way of saying that unlike many brothers, Bump and Pete are very close, "Those boys would fight like the devil for each other, but they never had a fight between themselves," he points out.

No two casches were stepped into his labs with providers.

"I never chased them off the field," Dr. Elliott recalls. "And they were all over it, too. Once in awhile they even got knocked down, when they got caught in the middle of a play . . . but as I look back, I have to think that maybe it helped them."

A former star of Weslyan, Dr. Elliott was head basketball coach and football line coach at Northwestern while aftending medical school at that university from 1918 to 1920.

Athletics were in his blood and while starting his medical practice, he was an official in Big Ten games on the week-ends. He coached the Wesleyan teams from 1929 to 1935 "strictly as a hobby." During that time, he also found time to teach his sons the fundamentals of football, basketball and baseball.

THE ELLIOTT BOYS WERE APT students, tea. They both starred at Bloomington High in all sports. They planned to enroll at Illinois, but the war changed that. You might say he actually recruited Bump, because as soon as he got his discharge he joined Pete and they played together on the 1946 and '47 teams." The Christmas season is approaching a lot faster than most of us wish and, with that in mind, it might be well for some parents to start looking for junior's fishing outfit. One of my pet peeves is the feeling of far too many adults that any kind of a cheap rod and reel will be good enough for Johnny or Jimmy until he grows up.

I grew up that way, but many years ago and in a country where we could catch fish on practically anything—A'T THAT TIME. Nowadays you just don't wander down to the creek, fout a willow pale, attach some string and a rusty hook and your own worms for bait. But how most of us wish that four kids could do just that!

There will never be the thrill of that first fish again. It There was never about six inches long, but to me it was the greatest fish in the world. It came from a creek hear my birth place of McGregor, in central Texas.

It's too had that modera-day youngsters can't do the same, but civilization in a way has overwhelmed us and great num-bers of those yellow perch are gone.

There was one other great thrill that came to me years later when I bought my first matched fishing outfit. It was just a heavy Calcutta rod and reel, but it was BALANCED.

I wouldn't think of using it today, but there was nothing to egual it in 1924.

LA BALANCED OUTFIT still remains the greatest tool of the fisherman, be he 12 or 90 years old. It isn't necessary to spend a lot of money to obtain balanced rods and reels. In fact, you can fit the outfit to your pocketbook at any reputable sporting goods store. There are dozens of such places

A boy is impatient when he starts fishing. He wants section: If he doesn't get it, he's going to try something else the in the starts. Like climbing a tree, or skipping rocks on the surface of a pond where others are trying to fish.

If that boy has mismatched equipment and the hooks are too large and the line too heavy, his chances of catching that

IF YOU WANT HUNTING EQUIPMENT, the story is the same; the stores are loaded with bargains, especially in game. Whether the industry has overstocked, or the desicrs have undersold is a matter of debate, but while that arguiment rages, the public is the winner.

There are terrific bargains in shotguns, rifles and even in WINTER SALMON FISHING on the Smith River was almost a one-woman game when John Weatherwax and Jim Hanson took their wives there last week.

21. The party got three salmon and two of those were hooked and landed by Mrs. Weatherwax. They weighed 25 and 23 includes respectively. The other fish, a 14-pounder, was caught by John just before the party departed for the south. The Hansons were just along for the ride, or so it seemed to them. The two couples had plenty of damp weather and the river was high and dirty with debris, making any kind of fishing difficult. John sald that some fishermen went upriver and caught a few steelhead.

Those Rick Rackers Will Have a Ball!

CURIOUS TO KNOW what's on the menu (just like a woman—or a man, for that matter) for their Winter Wonderland Ball, three Rick Rackers, Mmes. Eldon Sagehorn, Dave Eagleson and Ethel Severson, slipped into the cuisine of the Lafayette Hotel ahead of time to learn the delectable details from Emil Kollhopp, executive chef. What they learned is their secret until Saturday night when all Rick Rackers and their bushands dine sumptously and dance gaily to the Knights of Rhythm in the hotel's grand ballroom. Story about the Winter Wonderland Ball appears on Page W-2.—(Staff photos by Joe Risinger.), FELLOW IN THE MIDDLE needs no introduction; surrounding him are Mrs. Jack Marsh, chairman of Sandlarks' Yuletide display; Mrs. Kenneth Henry, and Fred Taylor, who advised members on setting for Fantasy.

RUMOR IS RAMPANT that flower-laden rickshaws will not only decorate tables for Rick Racker Ball, but will go home with guests in gaily wrapped boxes. Some of Rick Rackers who made and decorated the rickshaws are, from left, Mmes. Charles Cather, John Brennan, Malcolm Lucas and Travis White.

IF CHRISTMAS was changed to Jan. 10 would the street decorations still go up before Thanksgiving? Probably, Wo're glad the date remains the same, though. Otherwise we don't think Cecile and "Hap" Appleton would be beginning their holiday festivities until a week from maybe next Tuesday. As it is the first of their always gay Yule parties is scheduled for Saturday. Buffet and cheer from 5 to 7 p.m. Not having to wait any longer for a party like the Appletons would it make it worth looking at be-tinseled stores and streets from Labor Day It necessary.

MEMO TO Santa Claus: Did you realize that Baba and Bill Graham are among your best helpers? They had you in mind all the time when they hosted a cocktail, buffet and conversation party the other night, Gathered a few of their best friends together to put them in the holiday mood and spur them on a speeded up Christmas shopping spree.

If all went according to plan this past week's busiest shoppers have been Pat and Mickey McWhinney, Pat and Van Van de Water, Margo and Roy McCullough, Ellio Person (Frank, poor dear, is all unaware of the lovely things she's buying him because he's in Acapulco), May and Art Holtz, Betty and Bill Benuclt, Lou and Ed Lovell, Betty and Carl Spath, Nancy and Myrl Ott, Betty and Bill Barbee, Margaret and Borrio Betty and Bill Barbee, Margaret and Borrie Stimson, Dr. Morv Ellestand, Margo and Loren Conley, Frances and Henry Clock, Georgia and Frende Combs, Derothy and Eldredge Combs, Kay and Scrub Elliott, Carrie and Al Vignolo and Mil and Sum

WORKING ON the old theory that if you want a thing done ask a busy person to do it, we turned to Rick Rackers for a spot of news of the week. We found it! They're the hews of the week. We found it they is the kind who are already dancing while the rest of us are still standing in front of the juke box trying to decide which button to push! Number One R. R. Girl, Carleen Jaques, president, husband, Norman, and their baby son, Douglas, are all home again. They flew together as far as Dallas then took different planes. Carleen and Daug heading for Meriplanes; Carleon and Doug heading for Meridian, Miss., for a pre-holiday visit with her family while Norman skimmed the clouds off the skies en route to Oklahoma and Louisiana

Rick Racker Ball to Have Winter Theme

It doesn't matter if snowflakes will not softly caress the fur wraps; nor will it matter if sleighs will not wind through snow laden pines, A Win-ter Wonderland Ball can be just as breathtaking in Southern California, par-ticularly if behind it all is a group as clever as the Rick Rackers.

Their eighth annual ball will take place Saturday in the Grand Ballroom of the Lafayette Hotel, As is tra-ditional, proceeds will benefit the girls of the West Long Beach Girls' Club.

-Bright gowns of the women that night will heighten a holiday atmosphere already charged with the Christmas spirit in the form of a large flocked tree and tables decorated with greens and brightly wrapped gift pack-

Following a dinner, the guests will dance to the music of the Knights of Rhythm.

RICK RACKERS is the junior auxiliary to the Assistance League of Long Beach. Each member, either jointly with another member or individually, will entertain at a pre-dinner dance party.

Let's Get Young!

There is something charming in being alone with one's husband. Both reward and surprise are involved. Heaven forbid that through the years we should spend unlimited evenings with nothing but the face of the loved one to gaze upon-in that event we should cease to see itbut the tempo of mod-ern life is such that the contingency is remote.

It is, therefore, a genuine pleasure when, amidst the hubbub, two can reach a small oasis of solitude and enjoy each other's company, bereft temporarily of children, friends and associates.

As the years go by husbands and wives, even those who love each other dearly, get pried apart by life itself. People, interests, work, health, the attitudes towards children, the fermentation of change constantly taking place within each of us tend place within each of us tend inevitably to separate the lovers who once were so close. It is worth taking time out to search for the person one met years ago and came to know and fell In love with.

NOTHING IS certain, they say, but death and taxes. They are wrong. Change is certain, too. A human being actually is quite brave to take the chances he does—deather the fact he has no despite the fact he has no despite the fact he has no choice—affiliating his life with another in matrimony and in business, when he hasn't the foggiest notion of the development and change that is going to take place in the other person and in himself.

Despite some exceptions that have worked out well, that have worked out well, that is perhaps one reason why it is prudent to marry within one's own age group. Disintegration is apt to set in about the same time. It is tough indeed if, besides temperamental differences and divergent tastes and changing viewpoints, a couple also has to cope with a big age has to cope with a big age lapse.

The more I see of the world the greater mistake I think nature made. Bernard Shaw said something to the effect that it was a pity youth was wasted on the young, and he was right.

HOW MUCH more glor-HOW MUCH more glorious life would be if we were all born old and grew younger with the years. As we got to be about 78 or 77, say, we'd throw away our glasses and our dentures. Our strong second teeth would begin to sprout and we could look forward, after many years, to those darling baby pearls that would give our adolescent parents so much pleasure.

our adolescent parents so much pleasure.
Our gray hair would begin to darken, our spines to straighten. Crepey throat and crow's feet would be erused and there we would be in our early 30s, our mid-twenties, our teens, our young and lovely and vigor-ous shells fitted with the ex-perience of a lifetime, the wisdom of the serpent.

To be young and to be wise too, what a combination! To have acquired patience when one would have the time to wait. Too often, the way things are, we may perforce things are, we may perforce learn patience but the physical ability to profit by it is slipping by. Soon we will be too old to care whether we get what we patiently waited for or whether we accomplish those things or reach those goals for which we strove so eavnestly.

And emotionally, in a hap-pily topsy-turvy world, in-stead of the distillusionment atead of the distinsionment of age we should be rushing at headlong speed to the joy and thrill of falling in love for the first time. When the love affair was happy how glorious it would be and if it was tortured, and young love often is, the terrible heart-ache would be assuaged for we would be armored with our wisdom and experience. Our judgment would be sea-soned if not always sound soned if not always sound for—let us face it—even age does not necessarily bring common sense—a healthy crop of old fools is perennial—but our mental know-how and physical capabilities would be teamed.

AND THEN as we got younger we would at last sink into infancy as we now

Ol' Ted's Annoyed by Dirt Merchants

By TED KREC

Today, to assuage the legion of unkempt slobs who constantly badger me with plaintive cries to "get off their backs," I shall leave my balliwick and confine my remarks to things other than men's clothing. Not that these rubes need or de-serve any respite, but simply because I have something else to talk

The topic for today is vulgarity in shows, a situation which has caused me no little distress.

Please don't misunderstand me—I'm no prude. I know all the words and a good many of the jokes, but I see no reason for shouting them over microphones in some of the better upholstered man-holes we call nightclubs.

Occasionally my wife and I so to Las Vegas, but I'd like to add that we don't go to gamble when we get there. We figure it's gamble enough just to drive over there and back, the way those idiots push their mechanical mon-sters along the highway!

WE GO mainly to relax, get away from the ordinary routine of life, have a few nice dinners and see a few shows. But I don't know if I'll go back there soon again or not. I was pretty dis-gusted by the time I returned home the last time.

The discouraging part of it is this: here's a big-name funnyman, the idol of countless young people—a man imitated by youngsters daily in word and deed.

What happens when he gets to Las Vegas? I don't know, but there he is, up there on the stage telling a whole flock of off-color stories and making one crummy remark after another. Somehow after I hear this he never is outte as this he never is quite as funny to me again.

The last time we were in Las Vegas we wanted to see an internationally famous comedian but in order to see him we also had to sit through the performance of one of our better-known strip-treasers. By the time it got around to the comedian, I felt like leaving. This stripper acted like she was in a big hurry to get the show over with and keep a date with someone. She hesitated not at all, just went hurriedly through her paces, leaving little to the imagination, and departed. And do you know what? Hardly a soul in the place applauded!

The truly sad part of this is that it is so unnecessary. A good comedian or a good performer, if he REALLY is good, does not have to rely on filth to captivate an audi-

Laurel and Hardy or W. C. Fields being dirty or offcolor, and they used to frac-ture me.

To me there's nothing funny about studied filth, I must confess that many times a spontaneous remark will have a double-meaning to it, and it strikes me as funny, but when a man laces a script liberally with dirt and then bellows it over a microphone while he accompanies himself with obscene posturings, somehow I get a reverse feeling. I don't laugh—I just feel a little sick.

TO ME this man then anpears two-faced; he's not the kind of person I think youths should imitate. A man who is holier than thou during a charity performance but who dredges up the sewer for his nightclub act doesn't sound very sincere.

The same is true with a lot of the movies we're get-ting lately. Just look at the titles and you'll see what I meán. They're concerned mostly with hopped-up kids and souped-up cars, drink and depravity. Fine fare for our kids to be seeing—no wonder the Russians beat us with a satellite! The latest bulletin from Las Vegas is that even the gamblers are raising a howl about all the nudity in the shows. They claim it's giving the town a had name and eventually will lead to a big crackdown which will prove costly to them.

It all adds up to this, Camembert—the boys over there don't give a hoot if you lose your shirt, but just don't go any further than that!

Each side of a true triangle should be equal, I seem to remember vaguely, but something tells me that the sort of triangle you have in mind wouldn't work out that way, geometrically (or any other way) at all.

Anyway, sweet pi, it's pi equals 3.1415. So maybe you'd better check that telephone number—or have it changed, M. M.

RACHEL MORTON

Many music lovers in Long Beach know Lauris Jones, conductor of our symphony orchestra, from the podium and marvel that with his un-obtrusive manner, he has an uncanny ability to get remarkable results from his orchestra men without fireworks.

I talked with him the other day and learned that there is a great deal more to this young man than meets the eye First of all, he has had some remarkable tutelage and there is a vast amount of musical knowledge to be drawn upon. His unassuming manner belies his strong convictions and his keen enthusi-

Lauris Jones is a native Californian, having been born in Visalia. The whole family was musical — h is mother played the piano, his sister the piano and clarinet, and young Lauris took up the trombone in high school.

He received a degree from San Jose College and then went to Columbia where he received his master's degree. During those two years in Lauris Jones is a native

During those two years in New York City he studied conducting with George Szell, a great teacher; Eugene Or-mandy, a great humanitarian, and Alfred Wallenstein, a and Annual Waterstein, a great showman. These were happy years and Jeanne, his young wife, helped pay for all this by working as a librarian in the college library.

NEW YORK CITY might have kept the young conduc-tor from us, but war broke out and he became a navi-gator, piloting airplanes over the South Pacific. The life was very exciting and the pay excellent—but music was in the heart and blood of him. So he gathered his little fam-

As winner of a student competition he has appeared as soloist with the Long Beach Symphony Orchestra. He has played with the Passadana Symphony under Dr. Pichard Symphony under Dr. Richard Lert and last March he played with the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra.

fly, Jeanne and three lovely daughters, and took a course at the Music College of the West in Santa Barbara. That was a wise move, for there he met Richard Lert, that gifted conductor and musi-clan of the old German traditions, who took him to Pasadena where for 10 years he was assistant conductor of the Pasadena Symphony Or-

The training was tough, as Richard Lert demanded per-fection. Often he would call upon Lauris Jones in the middle of the orchestral program to "carry on"—whether or not he had rehearsed it.

AT REHEARSALS Mr. Lert would stand behind Mr. Jones as he conducted, whispering into his ear "all that was wrong."

"And there was plenty wrong," laughed Mr. Jones. Once he was called upon to conduct "The Messich" at the last moment, although he had never seen the soloists. That took a bit of doing.

Richard Lort is of the old
Gremanic romantic school, He believes in apprenticeship, or, in other words, in learning from the ground up. In 10 years association with such a man, Lauris Jones piled up a lot of knowledge.

He was called to Santa

Barbara in 1953 to be the conductor of the orchestra and for three years he had a very happy association. "Which of the three cities, Pasadena, Santa Barbara or Long Beach do you think has the most musical propensithes?" I asked. "Santa Bar-bara and Pasadena have great wealth to pay for cultural things, but culture does not necessarily come from money. It comes from a desire. I think that no other city on the west coast, excepting of course, San Francisco, has as great a musical potential as Long Beach," Mr. Jones said. (To be Continued Next Week)

America's Big Splash By Hal McClure

IF ALL the Americans who own swimming pools took a running jump into them, the sound of their collective splash could be heard round the world.

Exaggeration? Yes. But it's safe to say Americans have plunged into swimming pools in a big way.

Six years ago there were slightly more than 17,000 pools in the country. By next January the National Swimming Pool Institute estimates there will be 133,000. More than 55,-000 have been built this year,

Why this trend to the cement water holes? Several reasons, say builders and planning offi-

Pool builders say Southern California—with its high concentration of sunlight, smog and people is the swimming pool capital of the United States. It boasts the most pools, the largest pool building firms and equipment suppliers.

Christmas Eve in the Backwoods

HEN I was a boy in the Missouri backwoods, Christmas Eve was a big event, The entire community gathered in the old log cabin church to pay homage to the birth of our Saylor.

Father bundled us in the sleigh and we Jingled along the road to the church. The building seemed spooky in the pale moonlight, standing in the little cemetery where rows of sentitombstones guarded the white mounds.

Inside, a cheerful fire glowed in the old box stove. Kerosene lamps sent flickering rays of light dancing along the rough log walls and across the ceiling to reflect on the most beautiful Christmas tree in all the world.

Christmas tree in air the worm. Candles gleamed in the branches. Tinsel, bright toys, strings of popcorn and cran-berries encircled the tree. A big gilt star at the top completed the decorations.

BASKETS HEAPED with ·bags · of · carkby, · popcorn · balls and oranges nestled beside the tree for happy young eyes to feast on.

In those days backwoods people were very poor. Many familles could not buy toys and candy for their children, at Christmas, so my father in the goodness of his heart saw that all children had a happy Christ-

Father began the festivities with a short prayer. He implored the Lord to bless all present, guide them in the path present, guide them in the pain of rightcousness, have compas-sion for their sins, and even-tually gather them all in the Kingdom of Heaven.

After a couple of songs, my sister read the story of the Nativily from the Gospel of St. Luke, everyone listening with rapt attention.

NEXT GAME the dialogues and recitations, and as the program ended sleigh bells were heard in the distance, Nearer and nearer they came finally stopping at the church.

The children could contain.

themselves no longer, "Santa Claus! Santa Claus!" they Claus! Santa shouted,

The door burst open there he stood resplendent in red cap, red suit, and boots covered with snow.

"MERRY CHRISTMAS! Merry Christmas!" Everyone was shouting including Santa Claus and shrieks of delight greeted Santa when he began passing out candy and gifts to the children, aided by nimble young men and comely maidens.

Everyone caught the Christmas spirit. Men who had held grudges were shaking hands as they dashed away a tear. Sweethearts forgot spats and looked lovingly into each other's eyes, while old ladies found themselves chatling pleasantly when a short time before they were glaring at each other.

And that was the way we celebrated Christmas, in the backwoods, many years ago, in the old log cabin cherch.— W. G. WATKINS, 3624 E. Pa-cific Coast Hyvy, Long Beach. KING SIZE POASE RUBBER SOFA in Choice of Boltaflee Febric-Supported Plastic ER DECK machinery "mothballed," the door to her engine room sealed, the USS Haven, mercy ship with the familiar red cross painted on her sides, rests quietly in harbor waters, tied to Net Pier at the U. S. Naval Station, Terminal Island.

After heroic service aiding the sick and injured of World War II and the Korean conflict, the Haven has been "in service in reserve" since June 30, 1957.

One of the busiest vessels in the Pacific Fleet, she is the hospital for Armed Forces personnel, active and retired, in the entire Long Beach-Los Angeles

THE HAVEN HAS 421 BEDS, of which 300 are full all the time. An average of 110 operations is performed aboard her each month. Approximately 45 accident cases—victims of explosions, fires, plane crashes, traffic accidents—are brought to her each month.

Author and daughter take a Sunday bike ride, typical of growing bicycle fan population in Long Beach.

By Blaine Nels Simons

ONE RARELY sees a purple cow these days. Just as rure is the sight of a movie star peddling up to a premiere on a bicycle, a judge cycling to court, or an editor riding a bike to a meeting with the publisher of a newspaper.

I really never expect to see a lavender bovine but I imagine that some day I will see a movie star, judge or newspaper editor biking down the thoroughfare. My reason is that there is a boom in bicycle popularity and everyone and his brother seem to be getting into the act.

When my children ask me to tell

Bikes Hit the Comeback Trail

them about the "olden days" when I was a kid, I answer that in those dear dead days beyond recall only kids rode bikes. Today, the grown-folks soon may be outhumbering their offspring as bike riders. The elders are doing it for various reasons. Dad finds that it is cheaper and healthier to ride down to the corner store on a bike than in a car. Mother finds that the 15 or 20 minutes she can spare during the day advantageously by biking about the from her housework can be put to use neighborhood, street and maybe reduce the hip a bit to boot. Both Mom and Dad have learned, too, Ahat bike riding can bring the family closer together as a group through evening and weekend blke hikes.

BARON KARL DAVIS figured that bicycling heat walking, too. He invented a bicycle in Germany in 1816 that had pedals. Bicycles--so named because they had two wheels—had been in use for some 26 years up to that time but they had no pedals, One just walked them along for whalever good that did. The baron's contraption, although it did have pedals, hardly resembled the bicycle of today. One pedaled his bike as a child gets about in a kiddle car nowadays, by pushing forward with one foot, then with the

In 1840 the "Wooden Horse" was invented. This bicycle still had the kiddleder pedals but was stronger and sturdier than the baron's bike. Pedals were connected from the hub of the rear-wheel. For 16 years thereafter the Wooden Horse, was the uncrowned king of the biking world. Then, in 1856 the "Boneshaker" came along, introducing a startling innovation; pedals on the Iront wheels. This changed the theory of pedaling, too. Now one pedaled along as a child does today on a tricycle—a full rotating movement but without chain-drive. Where the Wooden Horse had a larger back wheel, the Boneshaker type had a larger front wheel.

From that date forward into the 1880s, front wheels kept getting larger and larger until, toward the end of the era, it was quite a jump from seat to ground. Pedaling also continued in tricycle fushion and everyone seemed quite content.

IN THE 1880s, however, at least two people became discontented. One invented the chain-driven, pneumatic tire hike as we know it today, with wheels of equal size. The other invented a gasoline engine which would run a bitle on a small amount of fuel. Automobiles may have made Texas oilmen and fire manufacturers rich, but bicycles gave them their start.

Today's bikes are still chain-driven and usually have wheels of equal size. But other changes have made bikes radically different from those hought only 20 years age. Bikes now can be equipped with a three-gear clutch operated by hand. A brake for the front and rear wheel is operated by levers on the handlebars, one for each hand. Small generators attached to the front wheel provide the power for front and rear lights for night riding. Rearview mirrors and new horns of all sizes and types are common accessories. Improved gasoline engines can also be purchased to power a bike should the rider tire of pedating. Bicycle salesmen, who once, sold bikes but didn't know much about them, are now experts on every detail of the make-up and riding of a bike; what they don't know about bikes hasn't been invented.

BIKE SALESMEN will also tell you that one can recapture health and physical fitness riding a bicycle. Confirmation of this is the fact that many doctors' offices are today equipped with stationary bikes. On these, various weight loads are geared to the pedaling mechanism dependent on the patient's injuries or physical problem. The patient then rides himself back to health on regular visits, finding when he is through that he has strengthened his legs, knees, thighs and lower abdomen. Those who ride bikes around town then are providing themselves with free therapy. Prize-flighters also have bicycles as regular equipment to use in their training routine. Seldom, if ever, will you see a fat professional prize-flighter or bike rider. Boxing's Archle Moore may be getting a bit on the plump side, but his firm, sound legs still keep him going at an age of 40-plus. Bicycling helped do it.

Despite the American surge back to the open road on bikes, however, we still must low to the European. In Copenhagen, for example, cars are far out-numbered by bikes, and bikes have the right of way. Traveling by car through France and Italy, particularly, I found that our progress through towns and on the open road was often slowed by hordes of bikes. Sunday was a particularly bad day for driving, for then all members of the family got into the act, each with a bike. Even in the great cosmopolitan cities of Vienna and Parls, bikes were a common sight. Ask any European traveler to name his favorite outdoor sport. The answer, invariably: Bicycle riding.

Although we will never pull ahead of Copenhagen in the bike-auto ratio, Americans will, in the not-too-distant future, popularize the bike riding sport to an equal extent with many European countries. Whether the reasons are for health, economy, family fun, or trying to relive a second childhood, more and more suburban Americans are becoming riders. For the older folks the relearning will be a breeze, what with all the new gears and gadgets. After a 20-odd year layoff I have been riding a bike again for almost two or three months. Already I am far and away the best and fastest male bikerider in our household or on the whole block. Some day, however, I may add a son to my string of three daughters and some day some adult male on our street will buy a bike. Then will my household-neighborhood superiority be challenged.

Unicycles are a freak development of the bicycling fad; but they are hardly the thing for Sunday afternoon pleasure riding on busy streets.

Boneshaker or neckbreaker, whatever name was applied, these bikes enjoyed brief favor. Aboard is Shirley Smith, assisted by hubby, Roy.

Splash Party

T'S OBVIOUS why anybody takes a hath—and that doesn't exclude, 3-year-old Tooky, A kitchen sink is a natural setting for the scrub-up process, though Tooky wiggles more than dishes do and requires much more soan. Laundering a small child calls for water at 98 degrees, room to squirm in at 75 degrees or more—all supervised by a cool and collected handmaid of the name of Mother.

Adults seldom get such Cindocalle.

Adults seldom get such Cinderella service, but Tooky takes it all for granted. After all, she reasons, hasn't Mombeen handling her affairs for three whole years!

O-o-o, that towel's wet—and cold!

Mommy, you're tickling my tummy!

This is the way we put on our clothes!

If I was a model. I'd pose like this!

If Dolly dunks, too, there's too much splash. So-o-o, out goes Dolly.

As far as Tooky is concerned, high-water mark should be below the ears.

These bitter words came from a Lincoln Park bench symposium when a car of ancient vintage coughed its way down the street. The speaker uttered the words as though they came from the scar tissue of his soul. The other men ocof his soul. The other men oc-cupying the bench nodded in so be r agreement. They had owned antique cars when the cars were fresh and right off the assembly line.

"Worse than a mule!" said a Missourian. "I've handled jug-headed, mean-natured mules and I've handled ears like that but the mules don't hold a light to them for mayhem."

"They were pretty reliable in a way," said a Native Son.
"Take the Model T, for instance. I used to go over the Grapevine to Bakersfield pretty often. Now that was a road! You can still see pieces of it,

It got plain tiresome sitting in that cab with the truck creeping along. When truck creeping along. When my old Lizzie started working hard and slowing down, I'd turn it around and back up. I could pass anything on the road except maybe an air-cooled Franklin, Now that was a real desert and mountain car!

A RED-FACED ancient from Wisconsin spoke up, "You and

"Then," said another. "That's when they would kick!"

"See this arm?" The Wisconsin man displayed a slightly twisted arm. Been busted twice with a car. Sprained my

The Missourian said, "I was always smashing my fingers changing tires. Ever got a flat Make a in gumbo country? saint swear."

Suid the Californian: "I got my first car right after the first World War. Lived in Santa Ana then. Brand new car so I And then, Brand new car so I told my girl when I would take her for a ride. I put on my ankle-choker ice cream pants and candy-stripe shirt and went out to crank the car.

it came for me. I'd forgotten to set the hand brake. I tell you I climbed that hood like a monkey! It didn't do my pants no good at all."

SAID ANOTHER, "It was a

"We stopped at a roadhouse near Anaheim," routinued the Californian, "and I met some friends I knew. I bragged up the car and showed it to them and then they sneaked out aft-erwards and let the air out of the tires. They thought it was a good joke.

"When I found that out I was sure mad, I tell you! The girl sat in the car while I pumped and pumped. Sixty pounds pressure and I bet it took me an hour and 10 gallons of sweat!

"That ain't nothing!" said the Missourian. "You should the Anssouran. "You should have had a girl out in the country on a rainy night and get a flat or let the gas line get plugged."

They all nodded sympathetically. The man from Wisconsin said, "Never was partial to drinking gasoline but seemed like I always had it on my breath from sucking dirt and bugs out of the gas line."

THE CALIFORNIAN said. "Had a friend who had a steam whistle for a radiator cap. Run five minutes on a hot day and you could sneak up on someone crossing the street and scare him silly blowing the whistle."

The Missourian said. "I remember having a cracked cyl-inderhead once and putting in a couple handfuls of oats. Scoled it off good. That car used to stall on railroad trucks. Never got hit but I had some bad minutes."

The Californian said, "Lost by first car that way, I was my first car that way. I was living in Los Angeles and I had some business in El Monte. It was all pretty open country with big live oaks them days. The car acted up all the way one thing after another -- and then I got stalled in a wash. While I was trying to start it heard something come down the wash. It was water, mud, rocks, sagebrush, rattlesmakes and critters and everything else. It doesn't take any time at all for a wash to get a head of water up when there's a storm in the mountains.

"I TELL YOU." he said. "I got out of that wash fast and stood watching it take the car downstream like a bowling ball. When the water ran off the car was standing there in the mid-dle of the wash, floor board deep in mud. I let it stay right there and took a red frain back to Los Angeles, that car again." Never saw

"Shouldn't have left it," said the man from Wisconsin. "Bet you could have got it going again if you'd wanted."
"Guess maybe I could have. They were rugged cars. Don't

"Thank Heaven for that,"

sald the Missourian.

A Yule Tree Can Be Fun To Make

By Caroline Coleman

A CHRISTMAS tree is what you make it—and all it takes to make your own is imagination, plus ready-made materials such as tinsel, ribbons, sheets of colorful metallic foil or cardboard, ornaments, plastic foam, angel hair, plus a "light" touch.

To prove the point, Miss Myrtle Falisbender, director of home lighting for Westing-house, cited examples from the make-it-yourself experiences of herself, her friends and neighbors. Starting with readily available, inexpensive materials and strings of Christmas tree lights, the symbolic features of the Christmas tree were recreated—with a minimum of effort—into ornaments for the buffet or ball table, the fireplace mantel, a window, a wall or a front door.

ONE GALA little eyelul- for the holiday table or mantel originated with embroidery hoops, angel bair, ribbons and tree ornaments. Another makebelieve tree was fashioned from stashed metallic foll stapled to a parchment or fibergles cone.

A tree for the front door was cut from plastic foam and studded with tree ornaments, And, with lattel roping, a whole doorway was framed in the outline of a Christmas tree.

OUTDOOR DECORATIONS, even when strings of lights are incorporated in the design, benefit from flood or spotlighting. Miss Fahsbender pointed out, "Otherwise, the color and detail of the design disappear in the dark of the early winter night," she said.

. To "go in for" a make-it-yourself tree doesn't preclude having the traditional evergreen in the living room or decorating a growing tree on the lawn. When it comes to stringing them with lights, here are a few pointers to make the task easier and the end result more eye-catching:

If strings are in a snarl from being packed away, lay them on the floor and straighten out kinks before attempting to put them on the tree. Make sure all bulbs are burning brightly, and that no cords are frayed or sockets damaged. Disconnect strings from convenience outlet before hanging them on the tree.

IN ABRANGING LIGHTS, start at the top of the free and work around and down. Place lights on the inside boughs first and work from trunk outward to the tips of the boughs. Make necessary connections, turn lights on. Then stand back to see if all looks well; disconnect lights and begin to decorate the tree keeping tinsel roping or metallie leieles away from the light bulbs and sockets. Again work from the top down.

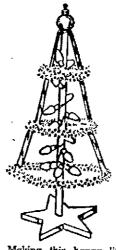

To help estimate how many lights are needed for trees of varying heights, this rule of thumb has been worked out:

Tree height in feet, 4, number of lights, 35; 5, 56; 6, 77; 7, 102; 8, 140, and 10, 210.

On the growing tree outdoors, strings of lights are usually the sole adornment, with perhaps a lighted star on top.

Imagination, plus a ready-made wire frame designed to hold Christmas cards, provides this decorative tree for wall, window. Pink tinsel conceals lights, frame.

Making this happy little eyeful begins by hanging embroidery hoops, graduated in size, with ribbons to center pole. Tinsel covers hoops, angel hair fills in tree form.

Slashed metallic foil in color stapled to plastic or parchment cone after holes are cut for lights, makes this tree. Slashed foil comes ready-made, or you may slash your own.

Make believe tree for the front door is cut from white plastic foam and studded with ornaments. Pine roping around door covers lights. Projector light also used.

Happy House in a Scenic Hollow

By Eileen Ball

THREE-QUARTERS of an acre of country living right in the heart of the city belong to the lucky Ernest H. Lockwood family. Their rambling, 3300-square-foot contemporary home is tucked away in a scenic hollow shaded with oaks and blanketed with rolling lawns where field rabbits—half tame, half timid—frelic in and out the flower beds. This pleasant, almost pastonal setting is at 53 Glenchester Rd. near the Virginia Country Club.

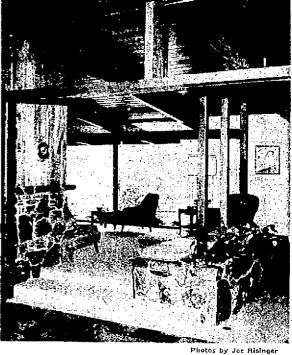

Architect Thomas R. Russel, Ala movided much of the min.

Architect Thomas R. Russell, AIA, provided much of the wizardry behind the planning. The house he designed was devised to function with perfection for this family of five, the children of which span an age range from babyhood to teenage,

THE HOUSE is closely and ingeniously related to its wooded site. Each room takes utmost advantage of the verdant delthrough floor-to-coiling expanses of glass that are low enough to make planting areas a part of the interior—and high enough to invite the sky in to meet the ceilings.

Important architectural scale has been achieved with the use of massive beams, huge rock fireplaces and planting boxes—with expansive open greas that unfold, one unto another. Here, truly, is a house that "lives big" without dinkiness or fuss—one that functions wonderfully well for this active family!

The entry area is on one level with the family room that lies directly beyond. But, to the immediate right of the entry is the living room—completely open to it but elevated three steps. Defining this break in levels is a long planting box of bark stone, a heavily textured stone that is mined from an Idaho river bottom. This craggy rock is a burnished copper tone that contrasts strikingly with the cool, glossy-lenfed tropicals growing in it. The same stome has been used, mantel-high, for the living room fireplace with its long, low raised hearth. Above the mantel, the wall is faced with natural black walning paneling. This same rich grained wood faces the extended left wall of the entry where magnificently matched panels completely disguise capacious storage cabinets concealed behind the wall. Hidden here is a complete wall-in bar with shelves softly illuminated from within by concealed lights.

THE ENTRY and living room are continuously carpeted in mellow tweed composed of saf-fron, gold and eggshell wool yarns. Oyster white casement draperies and a huge contemporary sofn in off-white establish a completely neutral scheme.

The exposed beam ceiling is completely faced with natural wood. Here, beams slope down to picture windows, extending out to form a continuous exterior roof overhang. Between the beams are jalousie windows, their narrow glass panes set vertically. Adding a distinctive definition to the ceiling slope are light soffits that diffuse indirect illumination up to the beams,

The south wall of the living room almost wholly devotes itself to the view where ceilinghigh panels of glass are topped with great clearstory windows. A glass door leads to a side terrace.

Decoratively speaking, the living room proves the dramatic effect possible with strict adherence to a neutral and monochromatic color scheme. Wall-paper used for two wall areas is pale sand lightly hond-blocked with small gold abstract motifs. This is as bland in tone as the pale beige-to-off white hues of carpet, draperies and uphoistery. All in all, these delicate shades—in combination with the abundance of rich wood tones—present a totally sophisticated yet livable result.

Picture windows in each bedroom invite the outdoors inside to constitute a major decorative feature. Entire residence enjoys a happy "openness."

Family room center of interest is black walnut built-in wall, including stone installation containing barbecue.

BRIGHT COLOR accents, of course, were necessary to spark the scheme. And this has been handsomely accomplished with the use of pillows for the hearth and the seating ledge that is an integral part of the stone planter-divider. Foam pads are upholstered in turquoise, coral and nude linen.

The family area that lies directly beyond the entry is situated so that its rear wall of glass overlooks the wooded back of the lot. Wood folding doors span the open area between the entry-living section and the family room. Over this open doorway, clear glass panels extend up to the sloping ceiling to effect a complete separation when the doors are closed.

In this manner, the Lockwood house "has its cake and eats it, too," for it enjoys the wonderful contemporary mood of openness without sacrificing the privacy of occasional separation. In this particular instance, it is an "open and shut" case of good planning that has much in its favor,

Everything in the family room is geared to ease of maintenance, comfort and generally relaxed family living.

AT THE NORTH END of the family room is the dining area furnished with a contempory dining ensemble. Extensions of glass walls eliminate the need for self-conscious interior decorations. The vista of gardens and trees fill the decorative needs of the room quite adequately.

The kitchen enjoys much the same sort of almosphere. For here, too, is a valted, exposed beam ceiling—a feature that adds great real and visual dimension. Again, there is a sweeping view of the grounds that comes through wide curtainless windows.

Three bedrooms arrange themselves in systematic order along the bedroom wing, each one overlooking its very own tropical courtyard through floor-to-ceiling-glass panels, jalousic windows provide circulation without having to obstruct picture windows with screens.

Country-style, site, provides a sheltered hollow within which the Lockwood home nestles quietly, comfortably.

Grandfather's Clock

By Elise Emery

THEN THE White Rabbit nervously chanted to Alice in Wonderland, "I'm late, I'm late for a very important date!" he might have been heralding our 20th century pre-occupation with split-second time schedules and relentless deadlines.

Yet the measurement of time has challenged man's ingenuity from his primitive days and the precise recording of time is new in the long record of human history.

As late as our own Colonial days, clocks were a luxury, more a symbol of their owners' wealth than a necessity Eng-lish and Dutch clockmakers working in New England not only were their own foundry-men, engravers, blacksmiths and machinists, but often made their own tools as well. In the 18th century a "clock" meant the movement, dial, hands, pendulum and weights—but not the case or cabinet. The clock owner usually ordered the case made by a cabinet maker, or made his own. In fact, sometimes he never got around to getting a case. The clock was hung on the wall, its movement unprotected from dust, to tick away the hours as a "wag on the wall."

AMONG EARLY American clockmakers working in Con-necticut was Silas Hoadley. One of his clocks, owned by Mrs. James S. Crafts, 261-A Park Ave., is pictured here with this arlicle. On its dial face, painted paper on wood, he has inscribed paper on wood, he has inscribed his name and place of business, "S. Hoadley, Plymouth," Tri-angular clusters of flowers, faded now, fill in the corners of the dial, and at the top is painted a landscape featuring a many-windowed building, probably Hoadley's own shop. The movement is brass, the weights east iron, and its bell strikes on the hour.

The fine case, beautifully and simply designed, is of pine, rubbed and finished to a near cherry color. American craftsmen often substituted this na-tive wood for the elaborate inlaid oak and walnut cases popular in Europe.

Hondley may well have made this case himself, for as a boy he was apprentized to his uncle, he was apprentized to his uncie, a carpenter, and he learned the art of cabinet making. In 1809, his apprenticeship ended, he formed a clockmaking partnership with Eli Terry and Seth Thomas. By 1813, Terry and Thomas had left to work independently: each became a ferror of the content of the came a ferror of the came a ferror of the came and the came a ferror of the came and the came a ferror of the came and the came a ferror of the came and the came a ferror of the came and the ca pendently; each became a fa-mous clockmaker in his own mand for clocks. During the war clockmakers had turned their skills to producing muskets, eannons, gun locks, gunpowder. After the war, a rerov-erng people, burdened with problems of a new government, had little money for clocks. As times became normal the mar-ket revived and itinerant peddlers again loaded clock works on horseback and traveled the country

By 1820, two factors charged the nature of clockmaking. Cheaply made wooden move-ments replaced the expensive and laboriously crafted brass movements, and Eli Terry introduced the inexpensive and space-saving shelf clock. Clocks were available at moderate prices for ordinary people; competition was so great that a price war forced the cost of a wooden movement from $10 to $5. Wealthy buyers preferred ornate, claborate imported

SILAS HOADLEY continued to work in Connecticut, a care-ful craftsman. He made money, was a substantial and influential citizen of Plymouth until his death at the age of 84. In 1849, he sold his shops to a firm for the manufacture of knives and shears and no more Hoadley clocks, were made. His skill lives on as his treasured pine-cased grandfather clocks mark time in modern homes.

Santa's First Sleigh Was a Ship

By Betty Hardesty

pLAYING Santa Claus is the hobby of James S. (Jimmie) McGarrigle, the best known and loved St. Nick in Long Beach, His jolly, booming laugh, natural beaming countenance, rotund figure and big heart filled with the Christmas spirit make him, in the words of one Independent, Press-Telegram news photographer "the most convincing Santa I have ever met."

McGarrigle, who lives at 25 Covina Ave., began his Santa career because the chaplain of the USS Lexington insisted that he play the role. He convinced Jimmie that they needed a reliable Santa to assist with their adopted orphanage party as well as the ship's children's Christmas tree celebration. The reluctant Jimmie, therefore, picked up a Santa Claus suit provided for him.

UPON VIEWING HIMSELF in that all-in-all, jumper type outfit, with even a face mask attached, he felt most unsure of himself. But the children at the Navy parties were so taken with him in spite of his imperfect costume, that his heart was touched. Then the USS Astoria crow begged him to be their Santa, and other ships, clubs and organizations of all kinds joined in seeking his help in distributing Christmas presents. Finding himself the center of so much joy, he realized he would probably play Santa the rest of his life.

His mind made up, he ordered a neat costume tailored to fit. The one he wears today is a Santa suit without flaws, yet conveniently constructed for quick changes and strenuous use. "Sometimes I put it on and take it off eight times a day," he says, "and often in such confined quarters as broom closets. It is heavy so I start perspiring almost as soon as I put it on," he says.

Santa (Jimmie McCarrigle) Claus checks off a batch of sample toys as Christmas assembly line gets started.

No one would know he is the least bit unconfortable in his handsome ensemble of bright, red velveleen, Trousers reach just below the knees and bag over shiny, black leggings. The long jacket is bordered with gentine white fur 4 inches wide, down the front and around the bottom and siceves. Fur, also, bands his stocking cap which fits snugly over a white, curly hair wig. A wide, flowing beard is attached. A jaunty, curled mustache adds the touch of perfection for Jimie needs no make-up. His naturally ruddy complexion is just right for the part and his eyes squint smilingly.

McGARRIGLE KEEPS himself businest during the prechristmas season but he has been called upon to act the part in every month of the year. "Even July, for sick kids, you know," says Don Webster, news photographer. "I remember when the Press-Telegram called him to put on his Santa suit to entertain little Rhonda Guthry of Truman Boyd Monor who was dying of cancer. That was in February. We also took along a young woman dressed as the Easter bunny. Our paper alone, takes well over 100 pictures of Jimmie each year, He's that popular.

Living his hobby for 30 years has made Santa Jimmie popular beyond his power to fulfill demands. This year marks the 25th in which he has distributed. Christmas, gifts for the Los Angeles Jonathan Chub children's party. In Long Beach, he has emptied Santa's hag through the years at most of the charitable parties such as hospitals and in numberless club and church gatherings.

HE WOULDN'T MISS his own Downtown Lions Club children's Christmas luncheon and makes the effort to appear at the Lady Lions' December meeting where he is made over more than even children could do. (Jimmie is a bachelor.) However, he has a full time job in which his joy-giving personality has found added activity. In the personnel relations department of Douglas Aircraft he visits the III, bereaved or unlucky and even wears his Santa suit on occasions as a personal contribution to cheer small members of a Douglas employe's family. There are 20,000 employes so his time is not always his own even after a normal working day. He expresses regrets that he must decline many Christmas invitations, II saddens him that some folks might not understand that days and hours won't stretch far enough for a Santa hobblest.

"Does it make you sad during your work to visit so many people who are sick and miserable?" someone asked Jimmie,

"Oh, no," he smiled, "it would if I couldn't do something to make them feel better. It's fun to take baskets of food and be Santa Claus for children of all ages."

Ilis sincerity is demonstrated each time he comes to a door where people are expecting him as Santa. At once he cautions them, "Are there any kiddles around?" for he does not want to be called Santa before he has changed from his civilian clothes and risk distillusioning a little one. Jimmie McGarrigle, is, always, a Santa at heart but loves best to dress the part when he practices his hobby of being Santa Claus.

Style Your Own Holiday Candles

By Florence Goode Bissell

GALA CHRISTMAS candles appropriate for holiday decorations are on display in the stores now, and many housewives will be wanting them for their homes. As every woman knows, soft candlelight adds great charm to the yuletide setting.

Unusual candles are expensive and that is why many people are making their own pretty ones at home - in various shapes, sizes and colors. The following instructions for candiemaking from the Rit Home Economics bureau will interest the "do-it-yourselfers":

EVENINGS HE 3-1407

Select light, all-purpose dye colors, such as light green, evening blue, coral or chartreuse, to get a bright shade. Use approximately 2 teaspoons of allpurpose dye for each pound of paraffin. One pound fills three 6-ounce juice concentrate cans or 2 half-plnt cream containers. one and three-fourths pounds fills one quart milk carton. Various sizes of gelatin molds or rubber balls cut in half may be used also. Heavy cord makes a good wick.

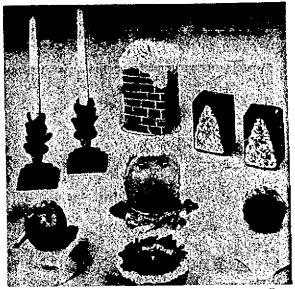

PUNCH HOLE in center of mold just large enough for string to go through. Run a piece of cord through the hole and the the inside to a pencil placed across top of mold. Pulling tight, secure other end of cord to outside of mold by knotting and covering with cello-

Melt paraffin in double boiler or old coffee can placed in pan of water. Color with all-purpose dye. Remove from heat and slic for 3 minutes. (Since allpurpose dye is primarily water soluble, some of the dye will not dissolve but will settle to the bottom.)

Pour melted colored wax into mold. As paraffin hardens, fill hollow with more wax. Unmold. Dip metal mold quickly into hot water to loosen. Cardboard moids can be peeled off.

Using household cement, decorate candles with glitter, sequins, or seals. Or with frosted whipped wax, applied with a fork. To make whipped wax, allow colored wax to cool until film forms on top. Whip with a fork until frosting-like consistency, and apply quickly. If it becomes too firm to spread, melt and whip again.

TO MAKE ANGEL and ball candles, fill both halves of ball with colored wax and allow to set, (Use' k teaspoon peach and % teaspoon rose pink to 21/2 pounds paraffin for angel face.) Cut heavy cord 1 inch longer than diameter of ball, dip in wax and let harden. Cut groove down center of one flut side of ball. Place wick in groove and pour small layer of hot colored wax on both flat sides of ball molds and weld together in ball shape. For angel hair, whip yelcolored wax and spread on candle, covering joining, and

The sentiment and festivity which abound in American homes at Christmas is depicted by artists Charlotte Sternberg (right) and Catherine Barnes.

Visions of Christmas

LMOST EVERY phase of Christmas life and lore will be found on the millions of cards due to flood Southand post offices the next few weeks, and each card will echo a "Merry Christmas."

Variety in Yule cards is perhaps more apparent this year than ever before. Every kind of Christmas tradition and activity has been used. Some take their theme from the Bible story of the first Christmas. Others recount pictorially the lovely legend of the Cherry Tree miracle. Colorful bells swing from coast to coast across the U. S. map. There are scenies with snowy landscapes. And there are humorous and whimsical cards galore.

But always popular, and perhaps more so this year, are the cards which reflect the sentiment and festivity which abound in American home and family life. One greeting card manufacturerer—American Artists Group—has come up with particularly handsome cards along this line with nationally known painters depicting a wealth of holiday atmosphere and the warmth of Christmas color.

FOR INSTANCE, artists such as Catherine Burnes and Robson Pittman deplet beautiful home interiors. Charlotte Stemberg and Ruth Ray evoke family sentiment and nostalgia in their pictures. Others of equal prominence vividly bring out Christmas hometown scenes, add traditional charm with antiques.

Avery Johnson, another painter with the same group, brings out a haunting lovely vision of the Southwest desert blooming under the Christmas star, Authentic portrayals of horses and sports are provided by artists famous in their fields.

And so the magic of Christmas will continue to be expressed this year, in a thousand different ways, as overburdened postmen make their rounds. TELEVISION

The Man They Couldn't Kill

By Terry Vernon

HE MAN 'They Couldn't Kill' was the nickname hung on Elfego Baca, a lawman of the old West, after more than 4,000 bullets were fired at him during a gunfight.

The fight centered around a mud-and-stick house where Baca had taken refuge. Some 50 cowboys did the shooting. But here is the story as told in his own words... remember, he's a man of action and not of literature.

"The testimony in court showed that there must have been about 80 cowboys. I knew two of the cowboys and I walked up to them and threw their guns on the ground. A man fixed a shot at me and I drew my guns and backed up to a picket house called "Hakal" belonging to a man by the name of Geronimo Armijo. I went into the house and put the lady and children out, then the fight started.

"ONE MAN GOT OFF his horse in a hurry by the name of Kearns. He said, "I'll get the little Mexican out of there." I could see him when he got off his horse through the crack in the door. I shot at him with both my guns at the same time. A man by the name of Jim Cook was leading the fight Cook was leading the fight well and good. I was hungry while I was there, but I found some beef and made beef stew, coffee and tortillas.

The court evidence (the door had 3,600 bullet holes in it) showed that over 4,000 shots wore fired at me within 36 hours. Finally, a deputy sheriff by the name of Ross showed up there, a deputy whom I knew at Secorto. He and Jim Cook asked me to surrender. I told Deputy Ross, I am your prisoner but I will not surrender my guns. We went into an understanding with Ross and Mr. Cook. I spent four months in jail before I was tried for murder and acquitted."

Eliego Baca, lawman of the old West and "the man they couldn't kill," is recreated for TV by Robert Loggia.

At the time of this fight Baca was 18 years old and his career as a lawman was off to the flying start,

Baca was a county clerk from 1893 to 1896, mayor of Socorro in 1896 and 1898, county super-intendent of schools from 1800 to 1901, district attorney for two counties in 1905 and 1906 and in 1912 was admitted to practice law before the Supreme Court of the United States.

He became sheriff of Socorro County in 1919.

THE TV COUNTERPART of Elfego Baca is Robert Loggia and during current season you'll see some of the exploits of this noted lawman on the "Walt Disnoy Presents" series Friday nights on (7).

Chinesë Cooking

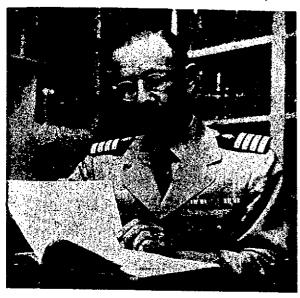

Almost all Americans have tasted Chinese food. Some are so delighted with it that they get a Chinese cookbook, prepare the same dishes they stuffed on in the restaurant, and are disappointed.

That's because they probably got their recipes from people who cook Northern-style, while almost all of the Chinese cooking in America is Cantonese, says the proprietor of New York's oldest Chinese restaurant in "CALVIN LEE'S CHINESE COOKING FOR AMERICAN KITCHENS" (Putnam, 3:50). His book contains 150 recipes for choice Contonese dishes, including such delightful delicacies as Niw goo yok (sweet and sour pork), Wor shew opp (braised boneless duck topped with shu ding (diced roast pork with mushrooms and assorted vegetables sprinkled with toasted almonds).

More than that, Lee writes interestingly of the history of Chinese foods, he tells his readers what kind of Ingredients to buy and now to buy them, and, importantly, sets up seasoning and tea charts. And, as if all this were not enough, he fritroduces chop sticks and shows exactly how to manipulate them!

The Boy His Father Despised

READER who wants to evaluate the first half of the 20th Century, the people and philosophy it has produced, would do well to read "FROM THE TERRACE" (Random THE TERRACE" (Random House, $6.95). John O'Hara's longest, most ambitious and probably best novel. (Although there always will be a few who will think that as far as writing goes O'Hara can not top his ("Appointment in Samarra.") ("Appointment in Samarra."

"From the Terrace" is a mas-sive book, 897 closely packed pages, carrying Alfred Eaton, son of Samuel Eaton, steel tycoon of Port Johnson, suburb of Philadelphia, from childhood, through a couple of world wars and pretty well over the United States and London.

Alfred is reared under a cloud because he is not his elder brother, Billy, slain by spinal meningitis when he is 14. The father, a hard man in many ways, had loved Billy; he despises Alfred, he hardly more than tolerates his alcoholic wife, Martha, and their two young daughters.

AFTER PREP SCHOOL, his first stay away from home, Alfred goes on to Princeton, serves in the Navy in World War I, goes into the early aviation business and then in Well Street research at the Wall Street, serves as a sub-cabinet officer in World War II.

"DISASTER AT SEA" by Otto Mielke (Fleet Pub. Corp., $3.95) and "ROUGH PAS-SAGE" by Dana G. Prescolt (The Caxton Printers, Ltd., $5): Here are two collections of true tales of maritime tragedy and draina, Comparison of the manner in which the sinking of the H.M.S. Titanic is recounted in each is interesting, Both are factual accounts, yet there are sidelights not contained in the in each other. There are 30 of history's major sea disasters written about in "Disaster at Sca." In "Rough Passage," Present pre-sents factual evidence pertain-ing to 11 true stories of the sea, including the tale of the mutiny aboard the whaleship Globe during a three-year whaling expedition in the 1880s. Apparent in both books is the thing that scafarers of all nations know: The sea threatens constant peril despite the advance-ments of science.

"THE POST READER OF CIVIL WAR STORIES" (Done bleday, $3.95): Of America's vars, the Civil War with families divided and brother fight-ing against brother, seems to lend itself best to fiction. For more than a quarter of a cen-tury, the Saturday Evening Post has fostered Civil War fiction. Among the best writers have been William Faulkner, MacKinlay Kantor, Stephen Vincent Benet, Joseph Hergesheimer, Laurence Stallings, John Marquand, Nineteen of the best of these have been compiled by Gordon (Carroll Famous Writers School in Westport, Conn. "NO RESERVATIONS" by Germaine Hancy (Denison, $3): Are you a woman who would like to go to Europe, even if you might have to go alone? Take heart! Read "No Reservations" by a San Fernando Valley newspaperwoman who did it, and had the time of her life, even though she had no reser-vations. She writes about flying across the country, firmly wedged all night between a wedged all night between a fat man and a Japanese gentleman—she liked them but she didn't especially enjoy sleeping with them! She writes about Ircland, the four read clover country, and England, the land of crooked stockings, and Paris and Vienna and Rome and every place she had adventures, Packed among the de-scriptions and the laughs are a good many sound travel tips,

"ARTICLES OF LASTING INTEREST: The Story of the Reader's Digest" by James Playsted Wood (Doubleday, $3.50): The first issue of Th Reader's Digest, edited by De Witt Wallace and Lila Bell Acheson, appeared in February 1922. Five thous and copies were printed. Today, with the Wallaces still at the editorial helm, the pocket-size maga-zine is circulated in virtually every corner of the world with a circulation in excess of 12 mililon copies, of which more than 9 million are subscription sales. Wood reveals the meth-ods used by the Wallaces and their editors to make it by far the most successful venture in magazine publishing and, if you read The Digest, you'll find his book intensely interesting,

"FAMILY SUCCESS BOOK, 99 Ways to Get More for Your Money" by the editors of Changing Times, the Kiplinger Magazine, gives a sharp quiz on how much you know about huving and your finances and prospects, and then solid, downto-earth information on buying meat, suits, air conditioners, automatic washing machines and driers, sewing machines, power mowers. It asks if your car is keeping you broke, and suggests ways to keep it in bounds. And it tells you what to do if you have been gypped as who hasn't, at some time?

"HAGAR" by Cothbura O'Neal (Crown, $3.50)! Not since Elmer Davis wrote "Giant Killer" has this reviewer been so impressed with a story based on Old Testament ac-counts, Whereas "Giant Killer" was a novel about King David, "Hagar" is a novel about the daughter of a Pharoah who became the handmaiden of Sarah, queen of Abraham's wandering tribe. The novel is beautifully written from the viewpoint of the handmaiden, Hagar, and the factual happenings are not inconsistent with Biblical doc-umentations. O'Neal expands the narrative in dramatic fashion, making it understandable how an Egyptian princess be-came the slave of a small nomadle tribe The great climax of the story comes when Ista mael. Well, Messrs, and Mmes, this is your dish: Paul Gallico's "Mrs. 'Arris Goes to Paris" (Doubleday, $2.50), the most delightful short volume to hit the bookstalls in many a day.

Ada Harris, London charwoman in whose thin body flames a love for heauty, knows what she wants-a Dior orig-inal. She never will wear it, but she can hang it in her closet beside her brooms and aprons and revel in its rich elegance, its beauty of lines and fabrics and the knowledge that it is hers. Mrs. 'Arris raises the tremendous price, 500,000 francs. She goes to Paris, invades the opulent precincts of the master designer, gets a black velvet evening creation called "Temptation.'

Designers, 'managers, auditors, fitters, seamstresses and a Legion of Honor man become human beings and her huddies, and she straightens out the lives of quite a few of them.

It will be a long time before the reader forgets Mrs. 'Arris, her green straw hat with a bobbing red rose, and her kindliness and hard sense. Knowing her is such a pleasure that the ultimate destruction of the dress is not the tragedy it would seem.

"Where do you suggest staying and what restaurants in New Orleans!"

THE BEST of New Orleans is the French Quarter— you might read Herbert As-bury's "The French Quarter" before you go

I like the Hotel Montelcone in the Quarter. Be sure to get reservations. New Orleans is always short of hotel rooms.

For restaurants: Antoine's and Gallatoire's are good for me. But there are plenty of others, For one morning, surely: Coffee and pully doughnuts down at the French market,

"We will travel in Mexico for a month and would like to study Spanish en route..."

YOU'LL STUDY IT whether you want to or not, if you are driving. For a good phrase book, the Berlitz pocket book. For study: "Magic Key to Spanish," by Margaret Madrigal. Best language teacher I ever read.

"What about a quick, inexpensive flying trip to Europet I am not inclined to go tourist class unless it is a very good airline,"

"ECONOMY-CLASS." Same airplanes and same pilots as first-class. The differ-ence is only that they squeeze in more seats and cut out such luxury items as the free cocktails.

Class does not indicate better equipment. A crew flying a tourist or an economy flight one way, may pick up a first-. class flight going back.

On some flights, the same airplane is sold tourist one way and first-class coming back.

Then, a great many lines simply divide the same airplane in two sections: One part tourist, one part first-class. But economy-class is even less exgensive.

Honolulu. Are apartments for; vent? Can we rent a car?"

THERE ARE RENTAL agencies right in the Waikiki area. You can rent cars, too. But I don't think you need one. Bus transportation is very good—this is not a big town Taxis are a little high. But the rides are short.

"Wo will stop over in Curacao in the Caribbean and wonder if a flying trip over to Caracas, Venezuela, is worthwhile?"

NOT TO ME, it wouldn't be. Probably the world's most expensive town and I found it without any charm. (So does everybody else I've talked to.)

I think Curação has much to offer. Trinidad is a GREAT place if you want to get over

HOW TO Do a Good Job of Patching Concrete

EADY-TO-MIX FORMULAS are easy for handymen to use, and come sacked with right proportions of cement, sand, and gravel. Add water according to directions. To mix cement yourself, use this formula for sidewalk, curbing, and driveways patches: 1 part cement, 2 parts sand, 3 parts gravel. First mix cement and aggregate (sand and gravel) to uniform color. Add water—a little at a time. Too much weakens mixture. Never use more than 6 callons to I sack of coment. more than 6 gallons to I sack of cement,

L KEEP CEMENT thick by chipping off broken, loose and cracked concrete (arrow) and removing all dirt before clean-ing break with water. Also re-move sandy and gritty-looking concrete, which often appears solid, but isn't. Proper cleaning assures a firm bond.

3. PRESSURE on stakes with foot holds form tightly against edge of walk or driveway. Cut point on one end of stakes for easier hammering. Hardboard forms, used here, bend easily, which makes them ideal for curved edges. Rémove after concrete has had time to set properly.

4. PURE CEMENT - right out of sack - should be scat-tered, then scrubbed in break with brush as a primer for patch. Or coat break with patch, creamy mixture of pure cement and water for the primer. To assure firm bond, pour concrete into the break before the prim-

Really, Crime Doesn't Pay

CRIME doesn't pay.

I had a job stacking pipe with an oil well supply firm on North Alanneda Street. The day I found out about crime we loaded a Ford onto a flatcar for shipment to an oil field in Texas. We boxed its brandnew tires, the exact size of the worn-out ones on my old jalopy, and nailed the container lopy, and nailed the container fast to the bed of the flatear. The job kept us late and I forgot to turn in the pinch bar and hardwood wedges I used in rolling pipe. They were charged to me and valued at five dollars, so I drove down that night to get them. And I may have had another idea in the back of my head. Two of my tres blew out just as I reached the pipe yard, the right front and left rear ones.

I STOLE ONTO the lot and picked up my tools, and I stopped a while to view that inaded flatear. It was all shadowy in the darkness, but honest to goodness, I could look right through that box just as though it was transparent and all lit up and see those five beautiful new lives glowing incide.

up and see those five beautiful new tires glowing inside.

Then I spied someone else moving around the freight ent. He creept underneath and I could hear him tapping and working at something there. I turned chicken. I drifted back to my old heap, put my spare tire on the front wheel and rattled off home.

rattled off home.

Next morning Nifty Spriggs, my gang partner, went with me under the flatear for a look-sec. We found a tin can wired fast to a flange over a rear wheel. The stuff looked like axle grease, but Nifty had been around. He fook a long sniff and went into the office and called the narcoties squad.

YES, SIR, IT was raw opium, set for a long ride and worth about $30,000, the police said, and what was more important, they picked up fingerprints that convicted a top guy in the racket.

Which goes to prove that crime doesn't pay, but hear this: That same morning the order for the Ford was cancelled. We unloaded it back into the warehouse. See what I mean?—OWEN RHODES.

PET PARADE

Now It's Parkas for Pooches

By Eleanor Avery Price

PIRST institution of its kind in the United States, the Animalport at New York International Airport will cater exclusively to animal air travelers. It is expected that more than 100,000 animals from all parts of the world, most of them dogs, will pass through the port annually, Fortunately, most airports are very conscientious about their pet passengers and request that owners, before trying to a substantial to the passengers. ing to put pels aboard a plane, obtain the animals' needed health certificates and learn if there is a need for quarantine periods on the other end of the line. Also, pet owners should check to see if special equip-ment of some kind is in order.

FOR EXAMPLE, it is colder in Alaska than in the South-land, yet people arrive there with shivering little dogs in tow, among them buildogs, Chihuahuas, dachshunds and Manchesters. Even woolly-coat-zones is not as funny as it sounds. In fact, they lately have become a thriving business in Alaska, all because an observant little Eskimo woman, Mrs. Gertrude Smith, finisher for the Alaska Fur Factory in Anchorage, was touched by the plight of Midgie, visiting miniature dachshund from Paramount.

Using pattern, furs, and satin, she set to work with her knife, seissors, and thread and created a handsome canine par-ka. Her first garment, a white fur "original" with standup collar and bright satin lining, was given to the little dog.

Midgie, parading in her parsatisfy parading in her par-ka, brought demands from other dog owners for similar attire for their pets, and the Alaska Fur Factory has been busy ever since making parkas of rabbit, squirrel, muskrat, beaver, lynx, and ermine. The garments come in sizes 2 to 28 to fit every dog from a toy to a Great Dane. Measurements are taken on an order sheet to shape the pattern — number of inches around the waist, around the chest, and from collar to beginning of tail.

Protect Your Plants from Frost

URING the winter months in Southern California it is not uncommon for the temperature at high noon to reach the 80s . . . and possibly be-yond. But this should not be interpreted as meaning there is no such thing as frost. Frost and near frost conditions are as much a part of our environment as high thermometer readings during the winter months.

Methods for controlling or combating frost are based on the fact that warm air rises and cold air, being heavier, moves downward. With this thought in mind, the more sensitive plants should be placed at the highest point of your garden and the tougher specimens at the bottom, where the cold air is more likely to ac-

ANY PROCEDURE that interrupts or halts the radiation of heat stored in the soil will prove beneficial. That is why there is less danger of frost on a night when the skies are overcast than when they are clear. Working on this prin-ciple, you can stretch a covering of a material such as aluminum over the plant, and the warm rays rising from the soil will be reflected back by this protective agent. The alu-minum should be several inches above the plant being protected.

You can also use a specially made plant protector that acts as a miniature hot house for each sensitive ornamental. Several sizes are available, depending on the habit of growth of the individual plant. The waxed paper, of which the protector is made, allows the sun's rays to penetrate during the time and a great deal of heat is thus stored up. Then at night, when the temperature drops, the warm air which ordinarily rises, is trapped by the protector, thus reducing materially the danger of frost in-Jury.

IT IS ADVISABLE to keep

We don't properly value our trees here in California because we seem to have an abundance of them. But both shade and fruit trees are being menaced more every year by in-jury from borers. This is a hidden menace... often you don't know a borer is present until you see holes in the bark, or sometimes roughage, like frass, on the outside of the bark which denotes a borer at work underneatii

In the fall of the year, the majority of borer species go down into the soil around the base of the tree and hibernate there until spring. So, a very easy, practical way to get rid of them is to use a borer solution which you can pour around the base of the tree to kill thim underground. An ethylene di-chloride solution being made for this purpose is excellent. The ether tumes spread through the underground areas evenly and destroy the borers without any injury to the tree.

By Bob Gilmore

the soil relatively damp during the coldest part of the year. It should not be flooded or made soggy, but just have sufficient moisture so the warmth will be absorbed into the soil. The reason for this technique is due to the fact that damp soil is a much better conductor of heat than dry soil. Since the dry soil is unable to store up any heat during the day hours, then obviously there will be just that much heat left in the soil at night. Plants being grown in dry soil are thus exposed to the maximum damage that might be incurred by a frost.

A mulch is also valuable during the winter months. A layer of peat, for example, spread on top of the soil, minimizes the alternate heating and cracking of the soil.

Any tactic that encourages air movement will prove advan-tageous. Still air cools off much faster than air that is moving, With this in mind, you will find it advisable to space your plants for apart and princ back ony speciments that have acted as wind breaks.

ONE GARDENING practice that should be terminated during the winter months is cultivating. Stirring the soil when the lemperature is low will do considerably more harm than good. Churning up the soil actually liberates the warmth stored in the soil, thus matewarmth rially reducing the temperature in the root zone.

You can minimize frost damage by reducing the rate of thawing. It is probably fairly true that plant mortality is greater after a frost than dur-ing it. The reason for this is that exposure to wind and sur after a frost causes dehydra-tion, and this may be so sudden and severe that the plant may die.

THE UPPER PART of a plant should not be covered, as it is important to have a free movement of the air un-ward from the soil level. Al-lowing the sprinklers to run all night might be worth while if highly expensive plantings are endangered. The water will probably have a temperature of 10 to 15 degrees higher than the surrounding air, and this may be the difference between frost injury and freedom from damage. An increase of mois-ture in the air changes the dew-point and thus tends to reduce frost damage.

Stretching burlap sacking, supported to stakes driven in the ground and placed between the plants and the sun or wind, will prove highly desirable. The sacking wards off the direct rays of the sun and thus protects the plant. This agent also minimizes the effect of a direct minimizes. wind. This protection, when once established in your gar-den, should be left in place until all danger of frost has passed.

Red Hot Poker, also called Torch Lily, tolerates sun, is hardy in most areas.

By Joe Littlefield

THEN YOU wisely select and properly plant per-ennials, you have color practi-cally the year around, whether in the sunny flower bed, or shady area. One of the many interesting perennials that was popular years ago is coming back into favor again, It is Kniphofia (Tritoma) "red hot" poker plant, or so-called torch lily. It stands lots of sun and is hardy in most localities.

It's a thick-rooted plant, forming dense clumps and having grass-like leaves, somewhat on the order of day lilies. The thick flower stalks are topped with orange and scarlet tubes closely packed in an oval pointed head blooming in the sum-mer, forming strikingly showy flowers. This old variety stands lots of neglect, yet grows well.

There are some new hybrids in dwarf and tall forms, in yel-low and white varieties, not quite as hardy as the older

TULBAGHIA VIOLACEA has been aptly named "society garlie," The strong onion-garlie odor of the foliage is quite noticeable when weather is cool or damp and leaves are wet. The gray green foliage sliced up fine and added in salads gives an interesting flavor taste.

The flowers, in clusters, bloom from May to late October.

This plant too, stands variable weather conditions, from mild areas along the coast to hot, dry, windy interior valley areas.

Tulbughia violacea has quarter-inch wide, blue-green leaves that form dense foliage. It not only is a welcome addition in sunny annual or perennial flower beds, but makes an interesting, informal hedge plant, whether bordering a driveway, walk, in front of a wall, or in front of evergreen shrubs, where some color is needed.

TO CONTINUE the tulbaghia color throughout the winter, plant the low growing form, Tulbughia fragrans, the pink agapaidhus, but be prepared for possible frost damage.

The spikes of small bell-like

BOAT TALK

Get With the Act

By Bob Ruskauff

IN THIS state and this country, a number of deeply interested and dedicated persons have studied carefully the Federal Boating Act for 1958, which began as the Bonner Bill.

There may be even more dedicated people who have studied our own state proposals, as discussed in recent interim committee meetings at Sagramento,

But it wouldn't hurt a speck If the other 99.44 per cent of the estimated 35,000,000 people who own boats in the nation took a broad, fast look.

Nor is it too late to project the reactions.

THE COAST GUARD, District 11, has reached every boat and yacht club and members of the boating industry in the area the boating industry in the area to advise of the public hearings scheduled Dec. 9 in Washington, D. C.

The regulations (these of course in the hearing involve those of USCG in its all-important part of the big boating picture) are only proposed.

AS THE ABLE Lt. Cmdr. Rubin Young of Long Beach, Director of Auxiliary, USCG 11th District, said, any club or boating group can get together with suggestions and send them in to this hearing.

in to this nearing.

Actually, there are three main regulations to be issued under the act, insofar as the hearing goes. They take in: 1—Numbering system of boals; 2—Boat accidents; 3—Boarding the whole the control of the state of the stat of undocumented vessels for law enforcement purposes.

But the federal act provides that states (as long as they're within the act) may take over the numbering job.

That part is a California issue now, Under the federal act only boats with engines of 10 h.p. or more must be numbered, Unpowered sailing vessels or other boats with under 10 h.p. are exempt.

"We Cover HAL

OUR PROPOSED state act would number sail craft and any boat with an engine of even 1 h.p.

Another state proposal bit-terly debated in the interim hearings is that which would prohibit persons under 18 years of age from handling a boat.

Another item: There's presently no licensing charge but the state proposed there would be one, renewable every three years.

Some are sensible; some may not be. But, the 35,000,000 should get with the act—before it gels with them.

BOAT HOOKS: Speedboats have two races slated today, feedured by another of the featured by another of the USRA's 50-mile stock marathon races, starting at 9 a. m. off Pacific Landing; also one at Salton Sea City.

YENTILATORS

A well ventilated boat will have no tendency to rol. Dry rot fungus requires stale, damp air if it is to grow. If clean air is to grow. It clean air circulates freely, rot will not occur. The drawing shows some of the common types of ventilators. Remember to ventilate inclosed spaces below, such as closels and drawers.

Caricature by Milt Reppert DON LEE ELLIS He Projects Big

A SOON AS they hear him the first time, people who understand and appreciate talent nudge one another and whisper: "Say, this fellow's great!"

And they're absolutely right. Don Lee Ellis, the young man in the tuxed who plays the organ and piano and sings alghtly at Everett Boyette's Charcoal Broiler, 5907 E. 2nd St., Naples, has the rare ability to "project big." He is able to put his selections across with so much depth of personality and artistry that he holds his listeners firmly until he sings that last superh note or strikes that final professional key.

Ellis is also a composer—and his works are in demand by record companies, congratulations are deserved by the Broller's owner, Everett Boyette, of recognizing Ellis' talent and keeping him at the restaurant for a record 16-month engagement. Boyette has a knack for finding talent in other departments too—his head chef, Millard (Wi mp y) Hill, being another outstanding example. Wimpy spends his evenings doing work he loves—cooking wonderful steaks and sea foods on the Broller's enormous red brick fireplace located in the main dining room. Currently featured are live lobsters (displayed in a glass case) which are charcoal-broiled by Wimpy with a master's touch. The patrons receive a generous 1½-pound serving for $3.50 on an epicurean dinner which includes drawn butter, soup du jour, splendid salad, vegetables, plping hot cornsticks, beverage and dessert.

Among the other fine entrees on the complete dinner are these, all carefully cooked to order: charcoal-broiled shrimp, $2.50; 12-ounce top sirloin, $3.50; New York cuts and filets, $3.75; tender prime rib au jus, $3.45 and the unique tenderloin of beef brochette, $3.25. Everett's Sunday special is a fabulous southern-fried catfish dinner which includes chicken gumbo soup, turnip greens, black-eyed peas, combread, potatoes, beverage and sweet potato pie with whipped cream. It's $2.50 for adults; $1.50 for shillden.

Open Sundays from 3 p.m. on, the Broiler servés daily from 5 p.m. on It's closed Wednesdays.

WHAT is our No. 1 hospital problem?

WHO is today's college hero?

HOW can we save amateur sports?

YANKEE DOODLE DANDY

by MAURICE CHEVALIER

When I was a teen-age kid, I went to the Alhambra, a Paris music hall, to hear a troupe of American singers and dancers. This was my first contact with American entertainment, and I was immediately impressed with the showmanship, the beautiful girls, the tip-top singing and dancing.

Right from the beginning of the performance, I was sold. But the high point of the evening came when these girls strutted around the stage singing that new hit tune by George M. Cohan - Yankee Doodle. Dandy.

As they say now, I "flipped," even though I didn't know a single word of English. It was the tune, exciting and gay, that got me. It made me want to stick out my chest, whistle and swagger down the boulevard. Parrot-like, I learned the English words of that song. And because I didn't know what the English words meant I mixed occasional French phrases with them, like "Quatorze Juillet" ---Bastille Day -- instead of the Fourth of July.

To me Yankee Doodle Dandy represented America. I loved it. It inspired me to mix my French spirit with American showmanship. I have continued to do this throughout my career.

And as long as I've been in show business, my fundness for Yankee Doodle Dandy has never wavered. Often I sang my own English-French version of it for friends, but never in public.

Now I am 70 years old and, as you may have heard, I am still singing. Not long ago at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, where I was appearing in the Empire Room, I decided to let my audience in on my version of my favorite song. Though it meant a great deal to me, I wasn't sure how my listeners would receive it. I'll put it briefly: I got the loudest applause for Yankee Dondle Dandy that I ever received in my 59 years in show business.

From now on I'll close every program with this number. And while the words aren't exactly the same as George M. Colsan wrote them, the spirit is. I feel that if he still were alive and watching me, he would smile and approve.

Here is the way my Yankee Doodle Dandy goes:

I'm a Yankee Doodle Dandy A Yankee Doodle Parisian A real life nephew of my Uncle Sam Born on the "Quatorze Juillet" I've got a Yankee Doodle sweetheart Her name is Sophie Tucker Yankee Doodle came to London Just to ride a pony I am a Yankee Doodle boy from Paris.

Fire buffs develop young - and with a difference - in Middletown, Pa. Ralph L. Myers, a sponsor of the "Sparky" fire departments (read about them in How to Fight Fire With Kids, pp. 36-37), tells of one young Sparky instructor who found the training invaluable. On duty in Japan as a serviceman last year, the young man was sleeping in a hotel room with two buddies when fire broke out. His friends reacted in panic -- and perished. He dropped to the floor, rolling his body to smother the flames. "I'll always be grateful for my Spatky training," he told Mr. Myers, "It saved my life."

Look before you leap into marriage at a very young age, counseled Robin Hart, 17, in our Oct. 5 issue.

Her story, I Am a Teen-Age Divorcee, prompted this candid letter from a reader whose name we withhold on request: "I, too, wouldn't listen to anyone. But after reading Robin's story, I asked myself several questions and discovered I was about to do the same thing. She reached me and I hope she reached others. I still date the boy I was about to marry, but although I think I love him: I'm going to get to know others for awhile. Thanks from deep within my heart."

Red carpet treatment-Red style

The Russians are ardent wooers — politically speaking. These days the most dazzling example of Soviet courtship is directed at the so-called uncommitted peoples of the world. The strongest Communist world of endearment is "friendship," and it is lavished where it can do the most harm — to the West.

These Red photographs of an Afro-Asian Writers Conference reveal Soviet techniques for winning good will in vital areas. The affair was held last month in Tashkent, showcase city of Soviet Central Asia.

Though masterminded from Moscow, the conference was purposely lacking in white Russian participants. Delegates were greeted by S. R. Rashidov, president of the Uzbek Republic. Another Central Asian, N. Mukhitdinov, delivered the keynote address. Besides being a member of the Communist Party's Presidium, he is believed to be the Soviet troubleshouter on Eastern affairs, "an Asian who can speak for Asians."

The Soviet style of red carpet looks more like a bed of hot coals to Western eyes. But in courtship — and diplomacy — only the results count.

These rabbits help doctors fight...

America's No. 1 hospital problem

by ROBERT P. GOLDMAN

The serene-looking rabbits—above—play a vital role in a new, uphill battle now being waged across the U.S. against an age-old hospital menace, infections from staphylococcus — "staph" for short.

At Bristol Laboratories, Syracuse, N.Y., the bunnies are "participating" in purity tests of new antibiotics. These tests are among the many forces being marshaled by the medical world against staph.

For this germ, in potent strains, has invaded hospitals throughout the world. In the U. S., about 3;000 deaths per year over the past five years have been associated with staph infection. Nearly every big city hospital has been hit by staph outbreaks. Post-surgical patients and newborn babies have been the main targets of staph.

Last winter, the situation came to a head when staph caused 18 deaths in a Houston, Tex., hospital nursery. That geared hospitals the nation over for action. Here's a news report on progress to date.

Staph is a "dirty word" in hospital circles today because 1) hospital personnel know that staph multiply when hospital housekeeping — plain, old fashioned sanitation—becomes lax; 2) certain strains have become resistant to widely used antibiotics.

Following the Houston outbreak (there are at least 100 others less serious per year in the nation) the American Hospital Association and other medical groups recommended tighter hospital housekeeping—and just as important, careful use of antibiotics.

In addition, drug companies set about feverishly to find new drugs effective against staph, particularly against a strain known as "80/81." The result: a half-dozen new drugs which show real promise and have strange names like kanamycin, ristocetin and vancomycin. In one study, kanamycin was 70 per cent effective in stifling staph infections.

Hospital housekeeping, too, has come in for a good, long look. Because staph thrives in dirty sheets and blankets, dirty floors and even in hospital uniforms, laundry, practices tare their guidecked and doublest checked to make sure that hot mater laundering and steam pressing are earried out.

Some Good Results

Perhaps the most important aspect of the staph control program involves antibiotics themselves. Thus, many hospitals are clamping down on frivolous use of such drugs. The Rochester (N.Y.) Regional Hospital Council is typical. Rochester area hospitals have been given these general rules of thumb: use antibiotics spatingly; do not give them for "marginal" purposes, such as when the patient has a cold and wants a little "extra protection"; set aside specific antibiotics for use only when you are dealing with a severe infection.

By such recommendations, hospital authorities in Rochester — and elsewhere — hope to have more drugs to which staph will not become resistant.

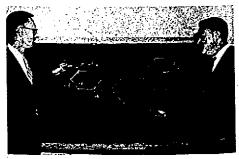

Some hospitals cautiously point to good results stemming from their preventive programs. In Columbus, Ohio, a hospital reports a half of one per cent infection rate among infants. Similar hopeful results are being reported by hospitals in Maine, Kausas, Michigan, California and a number of in-between points.

But the problem is far from licked. Staph is tricky. In most cases, staph does not cause active disease. It remains hidden and the individual simply becomes a carrier. And no one can predict when carriers will cause an outbreak.

One medical authority told PARADE: "Perhaps the best control measure is fear — on the part of hospital staffs. As long as they are afraid, they'll take the proper precautions, which, you know, are not at all new and should have been in practice all along."

And another added with a wink: "The current staph problem has done much to keep hospital people on their toes. It's even got doctors scrubbing up as if people's lives depend on it—which they certainly do." If

BRISTOL scientists, Drs. I. R. Hooper (I.) and M. J. Cron discuss formula of kanamycin shown on the blackboard.

WHO IS TODAY'S COLLEGE HERO?

by SID ROSS and ED KIESTER

. IOWA CITY, IOWA.

Once upon a time on America's college campuses, the star halfback was a little tin god. Male students stepped back in admiration when they saw him approach. Coeds clamored to touch his varsity sweater. There was even a song which began:

"You've got to be a football hero

"To get a date with a beautiful girl . . ."

But that was a long time ago. Since then, the football star has lost ground badly. In the eyes of an astonishing number of his college mates he is "a dumbbell," "a hired hand," "overrated," "passe."

This was one of the surprising findings of a series of interviews conducted by PARADE at the State University of Iowa here. In the wake of Sputnik and its increased emphasis on knowledge, PARADE determined to find out who is today's campus hero. Interviewers asked this question of more than 300 students and faculty members of all age and class levels and of all interests. Here are some of the highlights of their answers:

No clear-cut hero dominates the campus as the football star did in the past.

The campus leader or politician rates highest (see chart, r.), but by a narrow margin.

Brains are gaining respect steadily, and have been for several years.

Male students rated intellectuals higher than women did. They placed athletes first, and disparaged the "party-boy-fraternity man social leader" type.

Coeds voted for campus politicians and social leaders, looked down at athletes, placed intellectuals a sail last.

Most of all, students admired those whose ability ran in several directions.

Several students elaborated on this point. A real college hero, they said, should be a fraternity man, a leader in student government, with an extremely likeable personality, good brainpower and perhaps some athletic ability. Barring such a composite, they thought leadership qualities and personality came first. (For a profile of such a campus leader, see page 13.)

And perhaps the day of the college hero is past. "The students don't really seem to be hero-worshipers any more," said Peter P. Rempel, a psychology professor. "They're a little more cynical, a little more realistic, a little more concerned with themselves. They really seem to be skeptical of everybody."

Instructors Are Baffled

Several faculty members said they couldn't be sure whom students idolized. These instructors admitted the thoughts of a 1958 college student were baffling. The football hero, they said, definitely had sliped from his pedestal; the intellectual seemed to have gained some ground but not much; and no real hero seemed to dominate the scene.

A few students said flatly that they had no heroes, and neither did anyone else. Others said there were only "little wheels," idolized mostly because there were no big ones. And in many interviews, the students seemed to be not so much describing a hero as searching for one.

Here is what students said in voting for each of the four hero-types above:

Campus leader: In a world without a predominant hero, the man-of-student-affairs came closest. "Someone like that gives us something to hang on to," said one sophomore coed. Added a graduate student: "The day of the organization man is here. Most people think these activities a real preparation for future life." A third student added, "In a place like this, the one who can talk loudest, most and fastest is in the limelight."

"Maturity" Counts High

The campus leader rated highest with freshmen and sophomores, trailed off with juniors and did only slightly better with seniors. "These are people who've proved themselves worthy, people with fine qualities," said Judy Campbell, 18, a freshman. "Today," added a classmate, "it's maturity above all that we look up to. That's what the campus leader has."

Football player: Of all groups, the football stars took the worst knocks. "The athlete," said anthropology professor David B. Stout, "is a tarnished hera." Even the football players agreed. "I've been insulfed to my face a number of times," said senior Hugh Drake.

Perhaps one coed pronounced the final word on what's happened to the football player: "Muscles don't give a girl security. Brains, leadership — those things bring honors, and that's what a girl wants."

But football still had its ardent supporters. "Football is more immediate than outer space," said Jerry Lutz, a sophomore. Several students pointed out that football was less important on the campus than in the rest of the state. Added one boy "Alumni don't give money, for science buildings."

Intellectual: Surprisingly, many students lumped brains and brawn together—as two self-centered types that kept to themselves. Several persons said they would like to admire intellectuals, but never saw any up close. "The egghead," said one student, "can get along with books and no one clse."

But few doubted that brainpower was more respected than in the past. "The intellectual," a junior commented, "may never be the college hero, but not many people ridicule him any more." And many agreed that football stars and campus leaders had a brighter present, but the brain had a brighter future.

Social leader: Like the days of old Siwash, the day of Joe College, the party boy, seems to be waning—although a handful of students disagreed violently. Although male students hooted at them—"immature" was one of the milder words—some girls were equally in favor. "Your social leader-fraternity man is sharp, good company, a good time—what more would I want?" asked one coed.

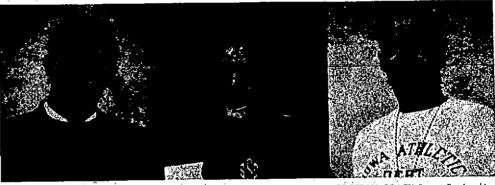

And one boy voted for the social butterfly only reluctantly. "That's the hero," he said. "That's the one the girls go for." Then, he added, a bit wistfully, "I guess that's the way it is these days."

HOME ECONOMICS PROFESSOR Edna Bowersox: "Students don't admire the bookworm or the social butterfly or the football hero. They're interested in people with more than one facet of ability—and the campus leader more nearly typifies this type of individual than anyone else on campus today."

SENIOR-VETERAN D. U. Bowmon, 2B:
"On this campus, the faotball star is the hero. In order to be a campus hero, you've got to have some publicity, and football is about the best way for that to happen. But I can't see that it means much:— neither the worthiper nor the worshiped gains anything from it."

EDUCATION STUDENT Lydia Weissenburger, 20: "The hero here is the athlete, as always. It's just a tradition, 1 imagine. But when you think of college, you think of athletics and hero warship. That's the way it's always been, and it's probably the way it always will be, at least as for as I can see."

VETERAN-SOPHOMORE John Goodman, 21: "The students dan't look up to anyone any more. The students I know are more concerned about themselves, about their own success. They say students today are lost and silent. I don't think that they are. They wouldn't be here in the first place if they ware."

SPEECH MAJOR Susan Sherman, 18:
"When you go out on a date and the girls ask, "Wha's he?" and you say, 'A fraternity man,' they look up to you.
You have to have good personality and even good grades to be a fraternity man. There are loss of things besides sports. The social type is my hero."

FOOTBALL COACH Forrest Evashevski: "A college here must be an all-around man, If he's a football star, he has to have other qualities. He has the inroad—but he has to have intellect and moral and social assets, as well. I don't think any student body today is fool enough to worship a uniform."

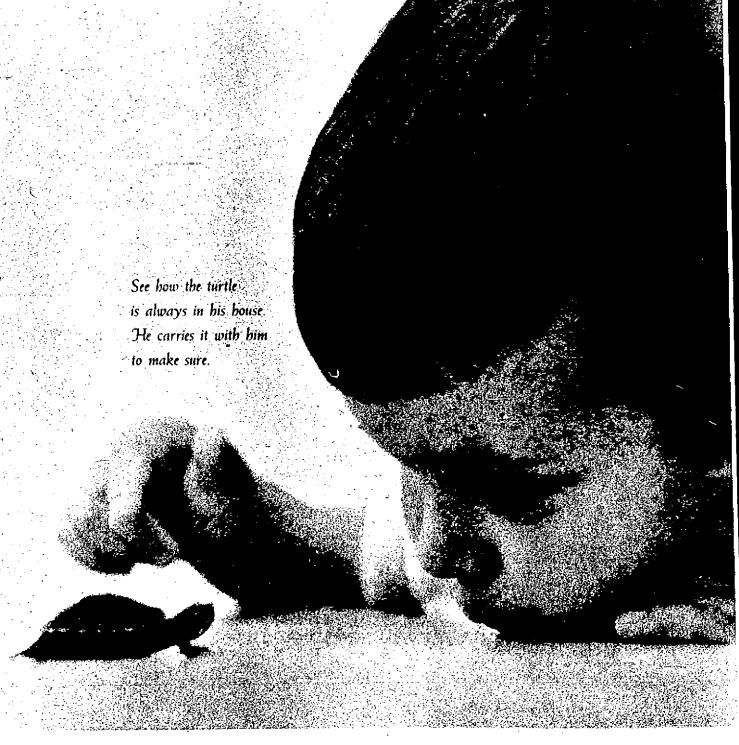

SLONDE JUNIOR Kathy McCormick, 20: "I can't look up to anybody who isn't intelligent and also a good, well-rounded person. Most students feel that way today. The hero here is definitely not the football player. He's not representative of the student body. But the well-rounded activities man is."

ENGINEERING FRESHMAN Robert Sufficeol, 22: "The scientific student is the big man on campus today. All the newspaper publicity, all the emphasis, has come to be an science and the intellect. The football player is still on top with one segment of the students, but the majority of them prefer brains."

UNIVERSITY PRESIDENT Virgil M. Hancher: "There are fewer heroes all over the lot, but I think the Intellectual has finally begun to came to his own. I think it's been a changing pattern, antedating Sputnik by several years. It works against the organization man and against the footbalt hero."

Today's college hero-the campus leader-explains himself

At the University of Iowa, when you ask about campus leaders, many heads turn toward a busy, hand-shaking junior named Don Prall, 22. He seems to personify what his fellow students meant by a college hero. This does not displease Don, who considers campus leadership the most important phase of his education.

"For my kind of future," he says, "extra-curricular activities will be better than a string of straight A's. Putting down on a job application that you were a member of the Student Council carries a lot of weight. As a result of what I've done and learned in collège, I feel confident that I can become a really good organization man — bright, eager, personable, with a background of organizing and leading educated people."

Don is president of his fraternity, Phi Delta Theta, member of the powerful Interfraternity Council and the Student Council and sits on a faculty-student board which sets rules for student behavior.

He also has a string of committee chairmanships, past and present. He was considered for president of the Student Council this year, but lost, in the campus equivalent of the smoke-filled room, to a law student, Still, it was quite an honor for a mere junior to be considered at all.

What does it mean to be a campus leader and a campus hero? Don, a cheerful and outgoing type, discusses it with astonishing candor. First of all, he says, he who would become a campus leader must show willingness to work. Leadership goes to those who will give spare time—a lot of spare time—to fraternity business affairs, Student Council meetings, party planning. But this is only half the work. There also is the full-time job of being, as Don puts it, "affable."

The Knack of "Glad-handing"

"You've always got to be in there pitching and smiling and happy and keeping the shining personality turned on," he says. "'Glad-handing,' it's called on campus. And you must try to make yourself popular with the female set in order to be popular generally. I'd say my greatest asset has been my ability to dance."

Don has been pointing for campus leadership for a long time. He was a high school leader at East High, Des Moines, and he feels he got off on the right foot here when he pledged Phi Delt. Later he served in the Marine Corps ("being an ex-Marine is a sort of passport to the future") and came back to college a veteran and therefore rated as more mature and worldly. This, too, has been a political asset.

The would-be campus leader, Don explains, must thread his way carefully. "You have to be careful not to associate with the wrong clan of people," he says. "Say an introvert group that isn't socially acceptable. Or guys who dress in the fashion of 10 years ago—blue serge suits and loud ties. Or people who hold themselves back and aren't social. These people aren't frowned upon. They're just not accepted. And if you associate with them, you're not accepted either."

Meeting the "Right" People

The campus leader must be equally careful to get in with the right people. He must make himself liked and watch his opportunities. Don says. He must shake the hands of the influential and persuade them to push him. "Part of the pleasure," he explains, "is being up there with the chosen few — knowing you're well-liked and one of the wheels."

Originally, Don was studying chemical engineering. As a sophomore he switched to commerce because he was more interested in "fields where a broad mind is needed instead of sitting back and drawing nuts and bolts." His grades are in the "C" range. ("I could do better if I wasn't so active," he explains.) He manages to date two or three times a week (Jeannie Anderson, shown with him on the cover, is a frequent companion) and, as he puts it, gets a lot of "chuckles."

Right now, Don is gunning for a post-college job with a large corporation — he mentions DuPont, Ford and General Electric — "somewhere between personnel and management." He'd like to work his way up, but eventually hopes to enter business for himself. Beyond that, his plans are not firm. Marriage after a time, a "nice family sports car," a "nice" ranch house. "I'd like a wife who's nice-looking, affable, able to get along with people," he says. "The same type of personality I'd consider myself to have."

RELAXING, Dan Prail (in dark sweater, r.) and Phi Delt brothers pose with their mascat, Benny, outside chapter house.

MEETING, Don listens to party committee discuss plans for a queen contest. He is Student Council delegate to committee.

POLITICKING, Don turns on the charm in snack bor of lowa Memorial Union. Note lay League tie, jacket, slacks. To be a leader, Don says, "you've got to dress in the proper mode."

DANCING, Don and date Jeannie Anderson inspect juke-box tunes. Dancing has helped his leadership campaign. While enjoying college, he says it's given him a "new set of values."

HOLDING THE BODY in correct alignment is half the trick of beautiful figure: chest high, back straight, weight carried evenly.

For a fine figure begin with your back

The slouch may have been all right for the chemise but it takes a straight back and a bosom held proudly to do right by the Empire fashions. That may not be so easy if you've fallen into careless posture habits. Corrective exercise may be necessary, especially if you've begun to develop that common figure fault, a sway back. A result of holding the body incorrectly, sway back becomes exaggerated as middle years approach. The muscles lose their tone, and a protruding abdomen is more pronounced. To correct this fault, abdominal muscles must be strengthened, new habits of carrying the body must be formed. Here figure specialist Charkotte Hesse has model Bobbie Shaw show posture flaws and, on the next page, corrective exercises.

THE TEEN-AGE SLOUCH is a posture error that leads to figure trouble later. Weight on one hip throws spine out.

DON'T ARCH BACK. Even the slim woman will look ungainly if she has a jutting posterior and protruding stomach.

Hollywood's new creed- ANYTHING

You may not be aware of it, but Hollywood has embarked on an unparalleled film spree of sensuality, sin and violence. In contrast to the restraint of former years, there are practically no more forbidden themes, virtually no more tabous otherets.

Why? The reason is simply because Hollywood today — in the threes of economic crisis—is fighting for survival.

Financially, the motion picture industry is in hot water. The RKO organization has been disbanded and sold to Desilu Productions. Republic Pictures no longer produces full-length movies. Universal is operating at a loss; so is Columbia. It is expected that Warner Brothers will lose a small fortune on The Lindbergh Story, The Old Man and the Sea and several others. MGM has been operating at a loss for years, and only this winter has begun to climb out of the red.

The anodyne to these tremendous losses, the only solution to survival, seems to be shocker-type movies.

House on Fire

In order to lure people out of their television-equipped parlors and into movie theaters, Hollywood is concentrating on "daring" themes, subject matter that will shock, sensationalize and attract the movie fan. If in the process the motion picture industry brings down about its head the condemnation of various civic, religious and parental organizations, Hollywood feels it's just too bad. As one film executive puts it, "When a man is trying to put out a fire in his own house, he's none too careful about whom he sprinkles with his water hose. Besides," this executive adds, "we now have proof positive that today's movie fan prefers the shockers to anything else."

Shockers Preferred

This "proof positive" consists largely of 1958 box office receipts which show that five of the year's outstanding moneymakers are Sayonara, Peyton Place, The Vikings, Kings Go Forth and Cut on a Hot Tin Roof.

Sayonara and Kings Go Forth deal with interracial themes. Peyton Place highlights the sex life of a small New England town. The Vikings, an infantile adventure saga considered by many critics the year's most sadistic film, shows a falcon clawing out one of Kirk Douglas' eyes, and Ernest Borgnine being thrown into a pit of maneating wolves. And Cat on a Hot Tin Roof, currently establishing new box office regords, is the story of a weak husband who remains aloof to his wife's increasingly nervous demands for love.

Convinced that films such as the abovewill attract movie-goers, Hollywood is preparing to release such "strong theme" motion pictures as Al Capone with Rod Steiger; I Want to Live with Susan Hayward, based on the story of a young California woman executed a few years ago for murder; Compulsion, a fictional study of the Loop Leopold murder; and The Sound and the Fury, the 1929 William Faulkner novel dealing with an idiot son, insonity, sex and suicide.

Also upcoming are The Mountain is Young by Han Suyin author of Love Is a Many Splendored Thing. Mountain deals frankly with sex, as does Lolita, the Vladimir Nabokov best-selling novel bought for independent production by Stanley Kubrick and James Harris. Lolita concerns a 40-year-old man and his attraction to "nymphets" — young girls of 10 to 14. He marries a woman his own age to get close to her "nymphet" daughter.

Secret Club

Also scheduled for 1959 film production are Strike Heaven on the Face, a novel which tells the story of a small-town high-school principal who discovers that his students belong to a secret sex club; The Best of Everything, which deals with the intimate lives of four career girls in New York; Anatomy of a Murder, the best-selling novel which reveals the technique of defending a soldier charged with murdering an innkeeper who supposedly attacked his wife.

The common denominator all these movies will have is, to put it euphemistically, carnality a la mode.

GOES

by LLOYD SHEARER

Parade West Coast correspondent

"Sex in the raw," says producer Jerry Wald, "frequently spells box office."

This is not to say that Hollywood is abandoning standard comedies and love stories - No Time for Sergeants, Damn Yankees, Houseboat and Indiscreet are all evidence to the contrary. It is just, to quote comedian Jerry Lewis, that "these days in movies there's too much preoccupation with downbeat, depressing stories, Everyone emphasizes violence, the gory, the sordid."

Of Hollywood, Lewis goes on to say, There's a small group who have made the decision to make this kind of picure, because they think it's what picture goers want. Some do. But millions clon't. They simply want to be entertained, amused, made to laugh and forget their own problems."

One producer to whom I showed Lewis' quote, shrugged his shoulders. "What lerry doesn't realize," he said, "is this: Nowadays people go to television for entertainment and to movie theaters for what they can't get on TV. The minute we both offer the same attractions, the movie business as we know it today is finished."

What does it add up to? Simply this: In the next 12 months, for every one upbeat film Hollywood releases, there will be at least four sordid, sadistic shockers. These are easier to come by than comedies; and they make more money.

GI deserter Wayne Powers, who hid 13 years in a French farmhouse, tells why...

He gave up everything

The arrest of Pvt. Wayne Powers, AWOL since 1944, made world news. Court-martialed despite protests, he was freed recently. Now he tells a Parade reporter his own fantastic love story—and reveals the classic irony behind the whole experience

FATHER OF FIVE, Powers leaves police station with Yvette Bleuse, who sheltered him, and broad born to them while he was hiding out. Powers says he may bring his family to U.S. later, plans for the moment to live among "the kind French."

An exclusive interview by DAN BEHRMAN

For 13 years, Wayne Powers lived hidden in a little village in northern France. He dared not go outdoors except at night or early morning. He always was ready to dive into a secret room. At last a knock on the door ended his suspenseful years. Here is Wayne Powers' story as he told it to me:

"During all those years, I've been a happy man. I have been with a girl who must be one in a hundred million, and now we are the parents of five children. With the love and loyalty I've had, I haven't missed a thing, I consider myself lucky.

I guess I wasn't always that lucky. I got into the Army in 1943 the same as everyone else. I became a truck driver with an anti-aircraft outfit, went to England and then to France in June, 1944. We were assigned to a replacement depot at Cherbourg and hauled supplies all over.

One of our main runs was up to Charleroi in Belgium. It's a funny thing, but there were dozens of towns on my run and I don't know how many cafes where you could stop for a cup of coffee. I just happened to choose one in Mont d'Origny. It's a little village of brick houses spread out along the main road between St. Quentin in France and Brussels. In those days, it was full of GIs passing through.

"Bonjour, Mademoiselle"

That was how I met Yvette Bleuse. Yvette lived right across the street from the cafe. I couldn't say much more than "Bonjour, mademoiselle," but we took a liking to each other. She was just 21, and I was the first American soldier she ever had spoken to.

I only saw her a couple of times before my luck changed, in December 1944. I was driving a GMC up to Charleroi with a load of jeep motors. Right in Mont d'Origny, I saw a GI thumbing a ride. I stopped and picked him up. Then, on the road north, I pulled over just to say bello to Yvette.

A lieutenant from the CID (the Army's Criminal Investigation Department) spotted the truck outside. He came into the house and told me he wanted to question me. He made me get into his jeep and ordered the CI riding with me to follow him in the truck. We never saw the truck again.

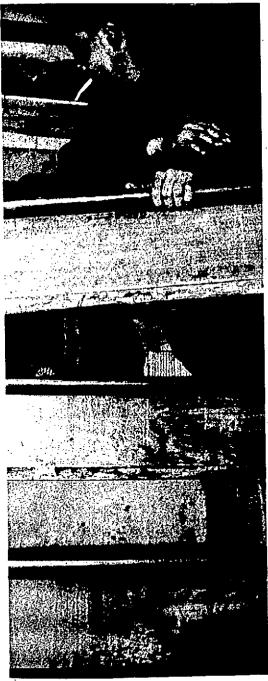

The lieutenant, however, seemed much more interested in me. In St. Quentin, I found out why. He thought I was a German spy! That was about the time of the Bulge, and Germans in U.S. uniforms were running around everywhere.

For the next 10 days, it was a bombardment of questions. But finally the lieutenant gave up, and I was sent back to Cherbourg — on a guarded train — to reion my outfit.

The trouble was, the outfit in the meantime had moved. So I hitchhiked to Paris and the north, because I had heard my outfit was in Vervins. But they weren't. I had no place to go and I didn't know a soul — except Yvette. So I went to her.

Remington Rand DIVISION OF SPERRY RAND CORPORATION

HAPPY COUPLE strolls down road near Mont d'Origny, village where Powers hid out. He now considers arrest "the best break I ever got."

The most ironic twist of all: the Army didn't know Powers was missing

•1 got to Mont d'Origny just about Christmas. I didn't want to hunt my outfit any more just then. It seemed easier to stay in Mont d'Origny than pay for a missing truck. I know I didn't do the right thing, but I never planned to go over the hill. I just stayed and regited

At first, people didn't pay much attention to me because there always were Gis in the village. But then the Army moved away — and there I was.

Now I really had to be careful. I stepped going out by day. As the months went by, we decided I needed a place to go in case someone came looking for me. Yvette and I thought and thought. Finally I pried loose one step on the stairs and put in a false ceiling. All I had to do was pull out the step and dive in.

In the beginning, with Yvette at work in a textile mill, there wasn't much to do except read — and I had only French books. So I taught myself French. When I didn't know a word, I looked it up. I read an awful lot of French books in 13 years.

Learning to Speak English

I just about forgot how to speak English. We had a radio and I could listen to the American Forces Network, but of course I couldn't talk back. When they finally took me back to the Army, I needed an interpreter. I understood everything and I knew what I wanted to say — but it came out in French.

I dikin't have to worry long about how to spend my time. Dorothy, our first child, was born October 30, 1946. Then Jimmy was born in 1948; Douglas in 1950; Harry in 1954, and little Freddy in 1956. Fortunately, the French have a system of family allowances and that was how we lived.

Yvette had to get up at 5 a.m. for work, so it was up to me to see that the kids got dressed, washed and had breakfast before going to school. When they came home, I'd go over their lessons with them.

An awful lot of strange things have been written about how I lived. Some of the fellows in the Army thought I had spent 13 years under the stairs. Actually I only went in a few times when the police came. Most of the time I was in the kitchen — it's just like those big country kitchens at home.

In summer, when Yvette's factory closed, we used to camp in the woods six miles away. We'd leave about 5 a.m. on our bicycles, and that was all there was to it. Living out helped after being cooped up all winter.

It was a happier family life than most men ever have. That's what I meant when I said I didn't miss anything. And I never met a girl like Yvette.

began to talk. That always happens when no one knows the father. But it happened five times to Yvette, and people used to call her the worst names you can think of. And she encouraged them — because it stopped them from being suspicious.

Then one day in October 1956, there was a bad accident down the road. We didn't see anything, but the gendarmes came looking for witnesses. Someone — I know who it was, too — told them: "Go ask the American in Yvette Bleuse's house — he's always looking out the window."

That wasn't true, either. With five kids to take care of, I didn't have much time for looking.

The gendarmes came around twice, but Yvette faced them down. Then they left me alone. They knew there was an American around somewhere but, if I didn't make trouble, they weren't going to. But I was seared. I began to use the hiding place under the stairs more and more.

And finally, on March 22, 1958, the gendames came back — 12 of them, six carrying submachine guns. They searched for three hours. They told Yvette they would use tear gas, but she said she didn't know anything. They threatened to bring in a bulldozer, and still she didn't know anything.

Finally, the captain noticed that the ceiling under the stairs seemed a foot lower. They went over the stairs until they spotted the step which had been pried loose. But they couldn't lift it because I had hooked it from the inside.

They got a carpenter from Mont d'Origny to come out to the house. But, when he saw what they wanted him to do, he refused. Like most of the people in the village, he was good hearted and respected the Bleuse family. So in the end, they did it themselves.

Letters Poured in

The gendarmes turned me over to the Army, and I seemed to be in a tough spot. But people came to my rescue. By the time of my court-martial, the U.S. Embassy had received 100,000 letters asking that I get a break. Many of them came from the States.

And the Army played square with me. Before the court-martial, it was agreed I would plead guilty and be sentenced to 10 years but that in reality I would be released in a couple of months. Gen. Robert J. Fleming kept his word. On October 9, I came home.

Things are better already. Now we can go walking on Sundaya, the same as anyone else, and the kids don't have to be atraid to say their father is home. Making plans for the future still seems strange to me. But if I can find a house and a job, I'd like to leave Mont d'Origny. There are fine people here — but we want to live where no one ever has heard of us.

I'm fed up doing nothing and I want Yvette to stay home for a change. I want to get married, finally—and in church, too, because that's the way Yvette wants it. And then we'll be a family just like any other.

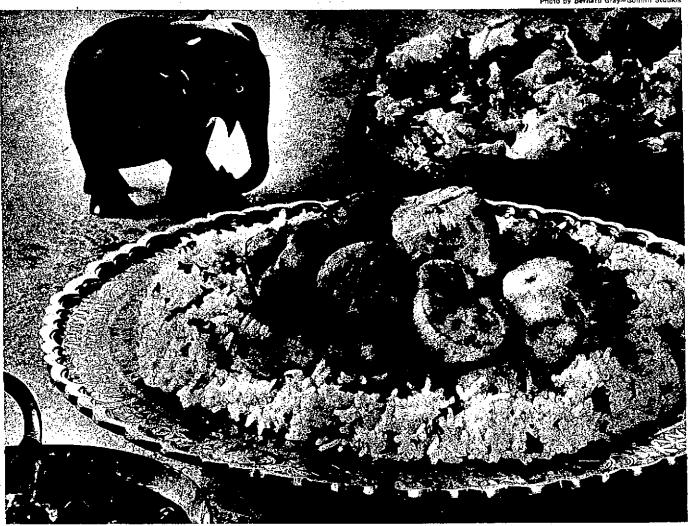

You know, the craziest thing about this whole business is that it never had to happen. I learned from the Army that the company clerk in my outlit never marked me AWOL on the morning report. Officially, I had never left the Army.

I could have gone back any time and no one would have known the difference?

It is the creative product of Mrs. Joseph Andrade, a young, pretty mother of three daughters and a cook who loves to experiment. Marge Andrade and her husband both claim Portuguese ancestors-which may account for her flair for seafood cookery. Serve her recipe with fluffy rice, chufney and a crisp salad.

EMPIRE STATE BUILDING, NEW YORK I, N. Y.

An angry wife speaks out

This Davis Cup tennis star's wife offers a bold plan to save our amateur sports

Richardson in action.

by Mrs. Hamilton "Ham" Richardson with Paul Gardner

PERTH, AUSTRALIA. My husband is a member of the United States Davis Cup team. We are here to try to win the Cup — symbol of world supremacy in tennis — from Australia. This is the first time Ham has played on a Davis Cup team. I hope it will be the last.

No wife, I think, can blame me. Suppose, in order to come here:

- 1) Your husband had to take a fivemonth leave of absence from his job, without pay;
- You had to be away from your children, if you had any (we don't), for three or four months;
- 3) You had to give up your own job (I did) to be with him;
- 4) You knew that if your husband lost in Davis Cup play, he might be the target of withering comment from one end of the nation to the other, for people can often be cruel to losers.
- You knew that even if he won gloriously, he hadn't advanced one inch in his career.

Most wives—and many tennis players—would prefer to stay home. In a way, though, I'm proud that my husband elected to come to represent his country to the best of his ability.

But hundreds of other fine U.S. athletes — including potential Davis Cuppers — are giving up amateur sports to make a living. I can't blame them.

World scoreboards have told the story. In amateur track our milers regularly lag behind—only one has broken four minutes. In amateur golf we have failed to win one major foreign tournament in the past year—and this fall we lost the world's open to Australia. In tennis we have lost the Davis Cup to Australia seven times in eight years.

We have lost more than games, for America's prestige soars when our athletes triumph abroad. One example: Shortly after Vice President Nixon was stoned in Venezuela, two of our top tennis players did well in a local tournament—and were roundly applauded. Their victory, I'm sure, erased a lot of anti-Americanism in Venezuela.

The Kids Are Hurt

Perhaps more important, though, we may be hurting our kids. For it follows logically, it seems to me, that if we put less emphasis on building champions in amateur athletics, we are going to put less emphasis on sports and physical fitness for all kids.

Proof, I think, rests in reports of official government committees, which reveal that the physical fitness of our children is slipping—and slipping badly.

I'll shock some people, nevertheless, when I suggest what should be done. Yet there's no reason for shock. What I'm suggesting is sound and honest:

THE AUTHOR and her husband. At 25, he's one of the world's tap tennis stars. Born in Baton Rouge, La., he won Phi Beta Kappa honors at Tulane. In 1956, U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce named him one of the nation's 10 outstanding young men.

Let's pay our amateur athletes their jull expenses—to cover the money they may be losing by competing.

It's just plain, common sense. If you're working for somebody and you have to take a trip out of town, you expect to be paid your expenses. Why should amateur athletes be different?

Oh, I know, You're saying that amateur tennis players are all rich—that they're paid by tournament promoters on the sly, under the table.

I've heard the same stories. They may have been true at one time, but they're not true any longer.

But aren't we now paid expenses? You bet we are — and that's a real laugh. Playing against Argentina recently, Ham was paid $30 a day: But we had to live near the tournament, at a tennis club, where our bill ran close to $40 a day. In the Nationals at Forest Hills, Ham got $15 a day. Have you ever tried to live as a visitor in New York on $15 a day?

Loss of Income

Now compare those "lush" expense payments against the cut in pay a tournament player must take. To get ready for the Davis Cup, for instance, Harnhal to get a leave of absence from his job as assistant to U.S. Sen. Russell Long, of Louisiana. I had to give up a good job as a writer. Result: We face five long months without any income.

In a way, we're lucky. Senator Long sympathizes with the plight of amateur athletes. He has said we are tying ourselves in knots with rules for amateurs that were written 100 years ago, and that nobody else in the world is paying any attention to them. He agreed to let Ham come back to his job, but I'll have to pound the streets looking for one. As usual, we'll be broke.

Free Ticket Sales

The expenses they have incurred — no more, no less — should be paid back to all players competing in the Davis Cup and the other major tournaments. This goes for other amateur sports, too. The money would come from box-office receipts, without costing the Government a cent. And by establishing a new category of amateur athletes — the "tournament competitor" — such athletes still would remain amateurs.

It's the only way, if we hope to continue competing on even terms against the Russians, Europeans and Australians — all of whom in a sense are subsidizing athletes.

I hope Ham helps bring back the Davis Cup. But, perhaps, if we lose, Americans will wake up to the financial plight of amateur athletes. We praise them as heroes. But we treat them as boloes.

How to fight fire with kids

When a home handyman leaves an oily rag on the work bench here, he runs the risk of a terrible tongue-lashing from, of all people, his small son. This boy would be a member of one of the town's two "Sparky" fire departments. These junior firemen, over 75 of them between 7 and 14, meet each week to learn fire fighting skills. Decked out in helmets and Sparky T-shirts, they man hoses, don gas masks, clamber all over fire trucks and absorb the one vital lesson everyone should know—to prevent fire, you must eliminate its causes. The boys are trained to put this lesson into practice where it is most needed, right at home.

National fire prevention authorities are solidly behind the Sparky idea. They expect it to spread to communities across the country for two good reasons: It teaches good citizenship, and the kids love it.

by DAVE GARROWAY

A man in a gray flannel suit, feeling rich with life, is walking down the street. As he passes a dilapidated building, he sees a little old lady, looking tired, hungry, forlorn. He's never seen such a sad-looking woman. He reaches in his pocket, places two one-dollar bills in her hand, and whispers encouragingly, "Keep trying," The little woman's eyes light up. The next day the man passes the same way and the shabby little woman is still there. He starts to pass by, but she reaches out and touches his arm and puts four crisp $10 bills in his hand. It concerns the time Fidel La Barba worked as an aide to Darryl Zanuck when Zanuck was running the Twentieth Century-Fox film studios in Hollywood. La Barba was a retired boxing champion who had been a great idol in Los Angeles and Zanuck had given him the job for sentimental reasons.

He and La Barba developed a little game during story conferences wherein Fidel would roll a blank sheet of paper into a round ball, toss it in Zanuck's direction and Darryl would swing at it like Mickey Mantle at home plate.

One afternoon, I was sitting in the Fox commissary with John Payne and Don Ameche when a writer raced in with astounding news. "Fidel La Barba was just fired," he screamed.

We were stunned for a moment. Then somebody moaned:

"My God, he must have struck Zanuck out!"
